The synod of the reformed Episcopal Church, recently adjourned, emphatically declared that there is a hell. There was not little discussion of the point. One or two soft hearted brethren ventured to suggest that perhaps it might be as well to allow a little latitude to believers, and to permit them to think either way according to their several reasons and consciences, but these were imminently "set upon" by the sound and plenary inspiration party, who would have none of such proposals, and lying back in the leisurely raised pistol position with a limp leg and arm go limply away. But the difference between opinion and target shooting, and when Jackson, or Jewell, or Fulton lifts the ladies' eye he accomplishes precisely what he attempted to do, whether he assumes a position he thinks take or not.

General News Summary.

FOREIGN.

THE Secretary of State made public, on the 29th, its recent correspondence with the Government of Great Britain in respect to the payment of the $8,500,000 bounty which is due on the 23d of November next. The Secretary forcibly expresses his surprise and indignation that the Province of Newfoundland had been permitted to pass laws which practically violate the provisions of the Treaty of Washington, and declares that the award will not be paid until the obnoxious legislation be repealed.

COMMISSIONER WILLIAMSON, of the General Land Office, in his report to the Secretary of the Interior, shows that, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 8,036,178 acres of public lands were disposed of, and 5,011,011 acres were surveyed, in addition to 721,918,748 acres previously surveyed. The total number of acres of public domain still unsurveyed is something over 1,040,000,000 acres. The disposals were mainly as follows: Homestead entries, 4,418,344; timber-culture entries, 1,876,646; desert-land entries, 310,623; cash entries, 87,505; grants to railroads, 606,940; swamp lands patented, 302,826; other grants to States, 214,992. The cash receipts amounted to $3,022,536, being $569,567 more than the receipts for the preceding year.

ACCORDING to intelligence received at Washington, on the 29th, from military officers on the Rio Grande, affairs on the border were more peaceable. It was asserted that there was a larger number of incursions into Mexico by Indians than by Mexicans into Texas.

PRESIDENT HAYES has officially promulgated, through the State Department, the convention which has been ratified between the United States and all the Nations of Europe, except Great Britain, together with most of the South American Republics, providing for the establishment and maintenance at Paris of an International Bureau of Weights and Measures.

THE monthly statement of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in the Secretary of the United States Treasury, shows the excess of exports over imports of merchandise to have been as follows: Months ending Sept. 30, 1877, $15,508,329; month ending Sept. 30, 1878, $30,525,376; nine months ending Sept. 30, 1877, $54,460,384; same date, 1878, $156,130,457. The excess of imports over exports of gold and silver (coin and bullion) during the same months ending Sept. 30, 1877, was $24,709,880; the excess of imports over exports of the same commodities during the same time in 1878 amounted to $621 900

ACCORDING to the report of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Postoffice Department, the net revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30 last, from the sale of postage stamps, was $16,889,115, against $15,881,935 the previous year. The amount of stamps, stamped envelopes, etc., sold was $17,375,593, against $16,757,775 in 1877. Expended during the year for mail transportation $10,444,179, against $10,306,023 the previous year.

ABOUT 150 Mormons arrived at New York from Europe, on the 29th ult., en route for Utah.

ON the 31st ult., the German-American National Bank of Newark, N. J., the German-American Savings Bank of the same place, and the Merchants' and Mechanics' State Bank of Troy, N. Y., suspended payment.

A PROCLAMATION has been issued by the President, setting apart Thursday, Nov. 28, as a day of National Thanksgiving and Prayer.

THE Prophetic Conference, called in the interest of those of all religious denominations who believe in the pre-millennial coming of Christ, assembled at the Church of the Holy Trinity, in New York, on the 30th ult. William Reynolds, of Peoria, presided. Papers were read relative to the future advancement of the Savior by Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., Prof. Kellogg, of Allegheny, Pa., and from Rev. Dr. Tyng, Sr., who was unable to be present in person because of illness. In the evening the church was crowded to its utmost capacity. There was a large increase of delegates on the 31st. Several papers were read, and in the evening Rev. Dr. Goodwin, of Chicago, addressed a very large congregation, expressing his firm conviction that the pre-millennial coming of Christ was the clear and unmistakable teaching of the Word of God.

MRS. NOONAN, wife of Sergt. Noonan, of the 7th Cavalry, who died at Fort Lincoln, on the 31st ult., proves to have been a man, who had been playing wife and laundress in the regiment for over nine years. He was a Mexican.

A MORMON, named Miles, who lately married three women in Salt Lake, has been held to bail in the sum of $1,500 to answer any indictment that may be found by the Grand Jury for bigamy.

THE public-debt statement, as published on the 1st, indicates the following: Total debt (including interest of $28,916,991), $2,269,417,646. Cash in Treasury, $275,217,473. Debt, less cash in Treasury, $2,094,200,083. Decrease during October, $1,708,402.

THE closing day's session of the Prophetic Conference was held on the 1st. The resolutions adopted declare that the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ is everywhere represented in the Scriptures as imminent, and may occur at any moment, the precise day and hour thereof being known only to God, and that the duty of the Church is to watch and pray, to work and wait, and to carry all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.

A STORY comes from Thompson, Pa., of a horrible outrage which was recently perpetrated in that village by two tramps, who entered the school-house after the children had been dismissed and grossly abused the teacher, a young lady named Alice Kennett and then, to prevent her telling the story, cut out her tongue. She managed to reach the blackboard and write thereon a statement of the terrible affair and descriptions of the villains, and then, while alone in the building, died from the effects of the injuries inflicted upon her.

THE American Missionary Association held its Annual Convention, recently, at Taunton, Mass. Six hundred delegates were present. The annual report shows receipts for the year to have been $195,601; expenses, $198,979; balance, $7,352. The current receipts did not equal those of the preceding year by $13,603. The debt, which two years ago amounted to $90,000, has been reduced, by gifts and pledges, to $36,598. The work among the Chinese and freedmen is said to have been productive of much good.

A FEW days ago, a party of masked men stopped the stage running between Cheyenne and Deadwood, and took therefrom Masterful and McLaughlin, a couple of road agents who were being transported to the latter place for trial upon the charges of robbery and murder, carried them to a grove of cotton-wood trees by the roadside and hanged them by the neck until they were dead.

YELLOW-FEVER NEWS.

THE relief-boat Chambers returned to St. Louis, on the 29th. The officers and crew were all well. Lieut. Hall, Commander of the boat since the death of Lieut. Benner, says the suffering of the people in the thickets on the river bank, and a few miles back, was very great, and demanded immediate attention. In some places the people were almost starving, food being scarce and the crops a total failure.

A MERIDIAN (Miss.) dispatch of the 29th ult. says there had as yet been no abatement of the yellow fever there, and funds were badly needed for the relief of the sick and destitute. The Meridian Aid Association appealed for assistance.

CAPT. BENJAMIN BLAZER died of the fever at Gallipolis, Ohio, on the evening of the 29th ult. He had exposed himself to attack by attending his brother's family who were suffering from the disease.

NEARLY all the absentees from Cairo, Ill., had returned to that city, on the 31st ult., and business was resuming its wonted activity. The news from the infected districts in the South was to the effect that the epidemic was rapidly dying out because of the cooler weather.

EIGHT yellow-fever deaths were reported in Memphis during the twenty-four hours ending at six o'clock on the evening of the 30, and five the day before. Most of the victims was a returned refugee who had been home only one week, and was sick only three days. Considerable uneasiness was felt by other refugees in the city.

THE deaths in New Orleans, on the 30, numbered nine; cases reported, forty-seven; total cases to date, 13,317; deaths, 4,954. It was not yet deemed safe for absentees to return to the city.

ONE death in Vicksburg and two in the county adjoining occurred on the 31. There were several new cases in the city. It was announced that the fever as an epidemic was practically at an end, and business was being rapidly resumed.

THERE were five new cases reported in Jackson, Miss., on the 31. The Mobile (Ala.) Board of Health considered it safe for refugees to return to that city. Two new cases were reported at Chattanooga, Tenn., on the 31. Refugees were rapidly returning.

THE total number of deaths from yellow fever up to the 31, during the recent epidemic, was as follows: At Memphis, 2,946; at Grenada, 1,000; at Canton, 200; at Jackson, 50; at Greenville, 50; at Holly Springs, 32; at Cairo, 31; at Shreveport, 30; at Vicksburg, 25; at Granada, 314

The ELECTIONS!

Full Returns From Everywhere!

BETTER and BETTER

A Solid North as Well as a Solid South!

The Republicans Carry Every Northern State in which an Election is Held!

The Republican party gained a victory in the late election of the 5th, of which surpass even the most sanguine expectations of its adherents. It has carried every Northern State in which an election was held, redeeming New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. It has elected Republican State Legislatures in every Northern State whose legislative elections were held, ensuring Republican Senators from New Hampshire, Connecticut (a gain), New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Wisconsin. It has not lost a single congressional district in the north, so far as at present known, while it has gained over a dozen districts. Such a triumph of Republican principles, and also of honest finance, is a glorious reward for the courage and fidelity to principle which the great old party has exhibited throughout the campaign, in every Northern State from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

New York shows a republican majority of fifteen thousand on the popular vote, Pennsylvania is Republican by fully twenty five thousand majority, Illinois by at least ten thousand, and Wisconsin by ten to fifteen thousand. All the other States of the North show similar Republican gains and majorities.

Not only have the Democrats been vanquished, but a party even more dangerous—if it should ever gain power—has been buried out of sight. The "National" party—the party of inflation and alternate repudiation—has so far as known, failed not only to carry any State but to elect a single Congressman. It has not merely been defeated, but routed and slaughtered. Its head and front, who sought by its aid to capture Massachusetts, is buried under an adverse majority of 30,000.

After the victory over Butler in Massachusetts, the redemption of Connecticut, New Jersey and New York is the most gratifying feature of the election. In Connecticut we gain the State government and Legislature, insuring a Republican United States Senator in place of Barnum, and also gain two congressmen. Should the next presidential election go to the House of Representatives, Connecticut will be found in the column of Republican States. General Joseph R. Hawley goes back to Congress with added honors and wider experience, and will make one of its most useful of members. New York gives a Republican plurality in the popular vote, for the first time since 1872. It sends an overwhelming Republican delegation to Congress, with a gain of two or three districts. Its legislature is largely Republican, and will elect a Republican United States Senator. These victories afford good ground for exultation.

Michigan,

The return from this State show even a larger vote for honest money principles than was anticipated, and larger than the first reports indicated. Gov. Croswell's plurality is 40,000. The Congressional districts give Republican pluralities of from 900 to 4,500, and the legislature is about three fourths Republican in the Senate, and nearly the same in the House. The aggregate National vote is apparently about the same as the Democratic.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Willits's plurality in the Second will be over 3,000, McGowan's in the third Third is 1,480, Burrows' in the fourth aggregates 4,000, Stanley's in the Fifth 900, Brewer's in the Sixth 2,000, Conger's in the seventh 2,400, Hoyt's in the Tenth 2,000.

THE NINTH DISTRICT.

The returns show Mr. Hubbell's election by between 5,150 and 6,000 plurality. His plurality in the Northern Peninsula will exceed 2,500.

SENATORIAL.

Mr. Bell is elected by about 8,000 majority.

REPRESENTATIVE.

The returns so far point with certainty to the election of Phillips (Dem.) as Representative by a plurality of between 50 and 100.

Siderates is cheaper.

We have met the enemy, and they are ours—horse, foot and dragoons.

For the first time in twenty years the Republicans carried Milwaukee County Wis. on the 5th. In 1876 the Democrats had a majority of 7,000 in that county.

In fifty six days more, specie payments will be an accomplished fact, greenbacks will be at par, and the host of the inflationists will have lost all significance.

The balance of trade continues to be largely in favor of the United States. Official returns show that the balance in our favor for the month of September was over $20,500,000, an increase of about $5,000,000 over that for the same month in 1877.

There are strong signs that the treaty of Berlin, made by the European powers at the close of the Russo-Turkish war, is but a flimsy piece of patch-work and is likely to lead to further and worse complications, and serve as the occasion or pretext for future wars, instead of guaranteeing peace. Disagreements concerning it are multiplying and it really seems as though some of them were to culminate in fighting.

It makes no difference how many Physicians or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an estimated fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of Lung Disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Colds settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, etc., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by your Druggist, Geo. W. Crofton.

The head of south Arm is taking a start in the way of building up, and will soon make other Pine Villages "chump" if they don't look to their laurels.

The Ladies Aid Society held an Oyster Social at the residence of A. Buttars (Tuesday) evening. Supper from seven till nine.

The Record Why of course. With four papers in Emmet County, some of them must be one horse concerns. But as it is nothing like brag and bluster. That's half.

Boyne Falls. Rev. Mr. Hamilton recently organized a Presbyterian Church at Boyne Falls. Last Sabbath they received eight new members by letter and confession of faith. The society now numbers fifteen members. They are agitating the question of building a Church, edifice.

PERSONAL.—Orson Campbell, Sr., of Beaver Island, is in town visiting his sister, Mrs. Preston, the mother of Mrs. S. H. See, of this place, who arrived from the East this fall. Mr. Campbell had not seen his sister in over twenty years until the occasion of his present visit.

—"Tip" Miller is over here from the Beavers, feeling mighty big. He was elected sheriff over there at the late election.

ARISTOCRATIC PAUPERISM.—With a few more cases of pauperism like that of John Limburger, Charlevoix county would need to expand the dimensions of her exchequer, and make wholesale contracts for transportation. For board, medical attendance and transportation that gentleman has cost the county within a year, $257.00, and now the Board of Supervisors have left it discretionary with the superintendents of the Poor to expend $280 more in sending him home to Sweden—probably by first-class cabin passage, wines and fruit included. This will foot up $367.10 for Mr. Limburger. How is that for high? Who wouldn't have a sore leg?

GRAIN.—The large amount of wheat purchased and shipped by our merchants this fall, is evidence enough that Charlevoix must soon have a flouring-mill. We already have two grist mills closely contiguous to Charlevoix, but the business of these mills would in no wise be diminished by another, which would flour this large amount of surplus grain that now goes to the Chicago and Milwaukee markets.

Crosier & Dennison are getting their new building to fine shape. The painting and graining are at work beautifying the interior. They have, as usual, consulted the wants of this community, and they offer extraordinary inducements to the trading public.

There is no better way of picturing the difference between the Charlevoix of nine years ago and that of to-day than by going southward from the bridge for a moment, over our beautiful village and its thrifty places of business, and then, turning upon your heel and gazing upon the "old store," which stands untenanted, solitary and alone. Less than a decade ago this was the only mercantile establishment in Charlevoix. Ten years years hence a greater contrast can be pictured.

It is our say now. Where over the office of the Petoskey Record finds an opportunity to throw a slur at a sister at Charlevoix, he considers it a part of his journalistic duty so to do. His last week's issue contains a statement concerning Charlevoix which misrepresents the facts in some particulars, and is totally false in others. Now, Mr. Record, turn the channel of your excessive spuriness homeward, and use it in the interest of your ephemeral city. Don't go for so much precious wind in trying to belittle your betters.

Hon. P. R. L. Pierce, Postmaster of Grand Rapids, died in that city on Tuesday last. His death is a serious loss to Grand Rapids and to Michigan.

NEW BUILDING.—The large building commenced some time ago by O. D Mason, on the south side of the harbor, is enclosed. It is a very strong and substantial building, and was originally designed for a planing-mill and machine shop. Mr. Mason now has under serious consideration the project of making a flouring mill of it. The building is admirably adapted to this purpose, and is favourably located. We hope he will carry these plans into execution.

THE HARBOR.—The engineer department have asked for $30,000 for Charlevoix harbor for next season's expenditure. Even if cut down to the same figures as last year, with what has been left from last year's appropriation, we shall have $15,000. Col. Mansfield proposes to expend the most of this amount in dredging, which, with the completed piers, will give us a fine harbor of probably a uniform depth of twelve feet. The importance of Charlevoix as a port, and the Pine lake region as a trading section, will take against stride forward.

MARINE.—The sow Forest is in port.

—The Fountain City was here Thursday morning bound down. She will make one more round trip this fall.

—The steamer Gazelle is still running and will continue to as long as there is any business.

—The steamer Clara Belle was here Saturday with about twenty tons of freight for Charlevoix.

—Capt. Dan Way has traded back the small schooner Flora, for a half interest in the schooner W. A. Smith.

—A. Fox & Co. talk of putting a new "fan tail" on the tug Com. Nutt, and otherwise improving her this winter.

—Mr. Bartholomew is having a large sized hull over the steamer Nellie Bootbe, and work will be prosecuted on her nearly all winter. She will be enclosed.

Of the 289 members elected in the House of Representatives there are 149 Democrats, 132 Republicans and 8 Greenbackers. The Democratic majority is reduced to the uncomfortably small number of 9 over all.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—At Pulaski, N. Y., on a recent Saturday night, the floor of a stable fell and left five tied cows hanging by the neck. When found on Sunday morning they were all dead.

—The intelligent Mr. James Wilson, of Bruce, Ontario, went to shoot crows and placed his left hand over the muzzle of his gun so as "to keep the crows from smelling the powder" till the last moment. He has more sense now, but less hands.

—At Doylestown, Pa., a few days ago, as four men were about going down into an iron mine to work, a pinion-wheel by which the cage was lowered broke and precipitated four persons to the bottom of the shaft, a distance of 350 feet. Three were almost instantly killed and one fatally injured.

—Judge Pierce, while angling at Swan Lake, Daviess County, Ind., the other day, got out of iron bails. He saw a large water-snake about 100 yards away spring from a log, seize a minnow and crawl back on the log. The Judge immediately picked up his rifle and put a ball through the snake's head, got the minnow and caught a four pound pike with it. The Judge tells this story himself.

—Probably no men ever stood closer against a wall than did the four miners who, were in the shaft of a Nevada mine, heard the holding-car break from its fastenings far above their heads. They knew there would be just a foot of space between the falling car and the wall; but they were not sure about their own thickness, and there was no time for calculation. They made themselves as flat as possible, and escaped injury, although the shirt of one was torn off.

—A resident of Jamaica, L. I., did a shrewd thing, the other day. While out gunning he shot a quail, in violation of the Game law, and some of his neighbors, who saw the act performed, prepared to lodge information against him. He anticipated them, however, by going to a Magistrate and entering a complaint against himself, was fined ten dollars, which he paid, and thus claimed half the fine, which is by law given to informers, received the five dollars and went his way rejoicing.

—A noise in Mr. Boone's house in San Jose, Cal., led him and his dog to believe that a burglar was at work, and they started in different directions to investigate. It was in the night, and when the man and the beast came together in a hallway, each took the other for the intruder. The dog sprang from under a table, intending to seize Mr. Lake, who, believing that he was attacked by a robber, hastily lired several shots. A light was brought, and the wounded dog, recognizing his master, crawled to his feet and died.

—One day last week, while Mr. Boone and Mr. Kim Thomas were out in the woods near Plattsburg, Mo., engaged in chopping, Mr. Boone saw a large black snake run into a hollow log. He told Mr. Thomas about it, and the latter went to the end of the log to take a peep at the serpent. Just about this time the reptile dashed out, and, before Mr. Thomas could move, was securely coiled around his neck, with his head in front of his, licking out its tongue ferociously at him. Although nearly choked, he seized it near the head, and, with the aid of Mr. Boone, who had gathered enough courage to take hold of the tail, the boas constrictor unwinding was successfully performed. The snake was about six feet long.—St. Louis Republican.

—Fifteen years ago this month Horace R. Strong was shot in the right hip while serving in the Union army. The wound was not long in healing and the ball did not cause him much pain or trouble, but the missile was never recovered. In fact, no effort to recover it was made. On last Sunday Mr. Strong was walking on Prospect street, when he felt a sharp pain in his hip, and upon going home discovered a large swelling just above his knee, to which sharp shocks of pain were sent from his hip. Feeling of the lump, he discovered a hard lump under the skin and wondered at it. All day Monday and Tuesday the spell increased in size, until Strong decided to have the core out. Doing so with an ordinary pocket-knife, he was surprised when the blade of the knife had struck a hard substance, and, with a cracking noise like the opening of a pea-pod, the leaden bullet which was sent into his hip fifteen years ago, forced itself through the flesh a portion and fell upon the floor. The wound has entirely healed and Mr. Strong is keeping the bullet to show to his grandchildren.—Detroit Free Press.

Respect for Age in France.

There is something very touching in the respectful affection and care with which old age was (and is still) treated in France. Not only the parents', but the grandmother's aïeul is the point of reunion of the whole family, vying with each other who should best please and amuse the old lady. They never failed, whatever their evening occupation or amusement, to come in first and delight Bonne Maman and Ma Tante by their pretty toilets, and be rewarded by the somewhat exaggerated admiration they elicited. But the old lady really thought her granddaughters marvels of beauty and grace. A very marked feature of French old age is its benevolence to the young, an impossible word to translate, for it is neither good nature, kindness, nor indulgence—rather an habitual state of the mind disposed to admire and approve. This tone of feeling is but natural for children to their parents; and the young to the old are almost universally dutiful and affectionate. Well do I remember how pretty I used to think the slight inclination and kiss of the hand held out to them, which prefaced the morning embrace to Bonne Maman. Our own royal family is the only one in England where I have seen this graceful custom prevail. If young women and girls knew how much charm and coquetterie there is in this manner to their elders; how much younger they seem, how their grace and softness gains by contrast with old age, they would not in their own interests indulge in the defect-out-of-the-way-old-Dan-Tucker style which obtains so much in our society at present. Even the young men were full of little attentions to their aged relatives. They really loved them almost as parents. When the "Prince Consort's Life" first appeared we all wondered at the deep grief he expressed for the death of his grandmother, a relationship scarcely taken so serious-ly with us. Adorable et adorée was the phrase used to me only a few months ago by a young Frenchman of that most modern set about the venerable mother of his parents. It must be said that the grandchildren were often brought up in her house, and that she, being much younger than the same relative is in England, became almost a friend and confidant to these young men, who found in her that experience in the past and sympathy in the present which made her society as charming to them as it was to those of her own sex. Not having in those days the resource of clubs, the young men came in with the news of the day to pass the time till the hour for the balls, thus bringing into these salons an infusion of youth, which obviated dullness.—Macmillan's Magazine.

A Man From Alaska.

A Journal reporter yesterday interviewed Mr. John M. Morton, who has recently returned to the city after a lengthened absence in Alaska, where he has been occupied in his official duties under the United States Government.

Mr. Merton has spent eight years in the Territory of Alaska, and has had many opportunities of becoming acquainted with that almost unknown region than most men who have sought to learn its resources and future possibilities. He has been officially connected with the Islands of St. Paul and St. George—two of the Aleutian group, and his duties, in conjunction with three assistants, were to act in behalf of the Government in enforcing the terms of the lease under which these islands are held for twenty years by the Alaska Commercial Company. In regard to these Islands, the inhabitants and their principal occupation, Mr. Morton says:

The population of the island of St. Paul is about 240 natives, and that of St. George 100. There are not more than 1,300 people upon the Aleutian group, and those who live upon the two islands named are unquestionably much better off and in a higher condition of civilization than any of their neighbors. There has been a marked improvement in their condition during the last seven years. When the contract of the United States Government came into existence, these people lived in mud tents, partly dug out, and so low that they were obliged to crawl in and out, while these miserable dwellings had no ventilation whatever. Under the conditions of the lease, the company is compelled to do certain things for the inhabitants of the island; but they have done more than was required of them. All the men are employed in the seal fisheries, which occupy less than two months in the year. They drive the seals in shore, kill and skin them, and salt and otherwise prepare the skins for shipment to San Francisco. For this work, which rarely lasts more than about six weeks, each man receives $400 or $500, and all the rest of the year they have nothing in the world to do. The company are also compelled to furnish the people with fuel, salt fish for the winter and sufficient salt in barrels with which they may preserve the flesh of the seal for winter consumption, this being their principal article of diet. All the money the people have to spend is in the purchase of bread and such other things as they may desire to get from the company's store.

They need not spend much for dress, as they can obtain plenty of sealskin clothing; but as a matter of fact some of them do buy very fine clothes, and dress in quite stylish fashions. It rests with the people themselves whether they will save money or waste it on finery and trinkets. The company's store keep a good assortment, and they have plenty of opportunity to spend money there if they are so inclined. But many of them are getting quite rich. Some of them I know have as much as $8,000 in the savings bank in San Francisco; and there are no class of laborers getting more money with less work than these natives engaged in the seal fishery. The company provides a school eight months in the year, and has built each family a comfortable frame house, thus bettering their condition to a very great extent. Last year a church was erected at a cost of $16,000, for which the people contributed out of their earnings and have paid off the whole amount. They are devout members of the Greek Church, and attend to their religious duties with great regularity.

Our stipulation of the lease is that not more than 100,000 seals shall be killed in any year, and as the lease extends over twenty years, and the company expects to renew it at the end of that term, it is as much to their interest as that of the Government to observe this condition. This present year the full number has been killed, but in 1876 and 1877 only 75,000 seals were caught each year, the reason being that the price of seal skins had become somewhat reduced. This year both the demand and the price improved. There is no danger of killing off the seals under the system at present adopted, as care is taken to catch only the young males from two to four years of age. They never kill a female seal, nor yet an old male, and as there are several million seals around these two islands—more than all other parts of the world combined—the reproduction is more than enough to perpetuate the stock.

The company pays to the Government yearly about $250,000, and this amount may be said to represent about all that Alaska contributes to the United States. The rest of the country, which is of vast extent, covering 600,000 square miles, is practically unproductive, but in time the spruce, pine and yellow cedar timber upon the mainland will become valuable, and it is probable that extensive mineral resources will be developed; their existence in some localities is already known. The temperature on the islands where I reside is not of such extreme cold as in other parts of Alaska. Last winter was the coldest I have known, and the thermometer was never more than 22° deg. below zero. Strong winds and frequent storms prevail, however, ten months out of the twelve, and this makes the weather much colder than would otherwise be the case. The two months of summer, June and July, are usually wet, but that is the only time I have seen when there are no wind-storms. There is a little winter flower, a kind of anemone, which is the first to appear in the spring, and is followed by a large, bell-shaped white people on the islands are fond of reading, and have a good library and such indoor amusements as they can follow to occupy their time.—Indianapolis Journal.

The Structure of a Horse.

His nature is eminently courageous, without ferocity, generous, docile, intelligent and, if allowed to be so, almost as affectionate as the dog. In his structure the ruling characteristic may be said in one word to consist in obliquity—all the leading bones in his frame are set obliquely, or nearly so, and not at right angles. His head is set on with a subtle curve of the last few vertebræ, or backbone, and is united in their turn, with another curve, forming the tail. His shoulders slope back more than those of any other quadrupeds, the scapula, or shoulder-blade, being oblique to the humerus, which in turn is oblique to the radius or upper part of the foreleg. So, again in the hindquarters, the haunch is set obliquely to the thighs, the thigh to the stifle joint, or the upper bone of the hind leg, which at the hock makes another bend, and so long as the limbs retain the form so long will the horse be fleet. The length that a horse, although a lengthy animal from the front of his chest to the back of the haunch, is comparatively short in the actual back or saddle-place. Then his hocks are rather long, and his pastern joints are succeeded by a slightly different angle in the firm but expanding hoof, thus completing the beautiful mechanism which presents the limbs from jar, and insures elasticity in every part of an animal destined to carry weight and to undergo rapid and continued exertion—a combination not existing in any other quadruped to anything like the same degree, and fitting him precisely for the purposes for which he was given to man. At present we have said nothing about his head, every part of which is equally characteristic. His well-shaped, delicate ears, are capable of being moved separately in every direction, and every movement is full of meaning and in sympathy with the eye. The eye is prominent, full and large, and placed laterally, so that he can see behind him without turning his head, his heels being his principal weapon of defence. His nostrils are large, open and flexible, and his lips fleshy, though thin and exquisitely mobile and sensitive. The large, open mostril, common to him, as to the horse breathes solely and entirely through it, being physically incapable of breathing through his mouth, as a view in the throat actually precludes him from so doing; hence the mouth of a horse, without a bridle in it, is open for purposes of eating or biting, but never from excitement or exhaustion, like that of most other quadrupeds, except the deer species. The lips are, perhaps, even more characteristic; they are mobile as well as part of his mouth, and the lower and others of his family alone use them in this way. The ox, the sheep, the goat, the deer, the giraffe above all, and, in fact, we believe all graminivorous animals except the horse, either bite their food directly with the teeth, or grasp and gather it by the tongue, which is prehensile, and gifted with more or less power of prolongation; but the horse's tongue has no such function, and, therefore, no such powers, as these services are all performed in his case by the lips, and no horseman who has let a favorite horse pick up small nibbles of food from the palm of his hand, can have failed to be struck with the extreme mobility, and also the sensibility and delicacy of touch, which the lips are endowed.—The Magazine of Art.

The Comtesse de Bassanville, editor of the Almanach du Savoir Vivre, tells ladies how to avoid "crows-feet" around the eyes. The recipe is simple—to close the eyes for at least ten minutes every five or six hours, and thus rest the muscles of the face.

Children's Fashions.

Plaid stockings will be much worn by children this winter; the real Scotch stockings have the plaids in diamond-shape designs.

Children's furs this year consist of little round boas and muffs, generally of chinchilla, which is the most fashionable; dark squirrel is also used.

Dark brown cashmere will be much used for coats for little children of two and three years old; these are made with a deep cape, edged with folds of satin stitched on.

Girls of seven or nine years of age wear dresses made with the skirt polished with a plaiting and a bias band, and a plaited waist belted in and finished with a triple collar.

Knitted goods are very pretty this year. The woolen sacques for little children from one to four years old come in dark colors, with the borders shaded; dark taffy-brown, with border shaded from light cream to sienna brown, is very pretty, as is also ruby red shaded to brown.

Misses wear plaid suits made with the scarf, which crosses in front and is draped on the right shoulder, the end hanging loose over the back. The dress and scarf are made in the bias of the plaid. For house dresses plain material, such as casimere and merino, is made with plaited waist cut with open square, and a chemisette or rows of lace worn inside.

Some of the prettiest little coats seen this year for little boys or girls are of brown or dark velvet cloth, with soft fleece lining; these have a wide plastron piece of brown velvet down the front, which is also worn in the hood, and a wide sash in front of the waist forms a loop shaped like a muff. The pockets, cuffs and collar are of brown velvet. Light mousse cloth is used in the same way.

Little girls until they are six years old can wear most of the nobby little suits which are made with kilted shirts or in blouse shapes for boys. In the tartan goods now used the skirts are made like little Highlander kilts, and little, double-breasted jackets, with two rows of small pearl buttons in dark polished horn. On the front plait of the dress two full rosettes are set near the edge.

Very dressy little coats of white matelasse are made with coachmen's capes, the edges of the capes and the edges of the coats are finished with a ruffle of Mirecourt lace, set under a cable cord of silver. Knots of satin ribbon are put on the pockets and up the front. With these coats little bonnets are worn to match, with shirred Maria Stuart fronts; a little bunch of roses-buds and some forget-me-nots are set in the face trimming.

There are numberless styles of hats worn, this year, by little children, as in suits, girls and boys wear the same hats until they are quite age. The "sepi," the French soldier's fatigue hat, is worn a great deal, and a wide-brimmed, soft-crowned hat, which is set on the back of the head. The is finished with a large, soft pompon set in the middle of the crown. Little boys wear "soldier" hats made of cloth, with the peak edged with a twist of gold cord.

"Pierrot" hats for little girls have large, pointed crowns—the crowns in a light shade of blue and the brims, which turn down, of a darker shade; these are trimmed with maroon ribbon and have long, full, floating ends. Plush hats, with high crowns and slightly-rolled brims are sometimes varied by having the brim caught up at one side with a flat silver ornament, and a long, soft ostrich wing or aigrette in place. Older girls wear "toques" or turbans of velvet, with soft crowns.

For evening dresses or dancing-school dresses several pretty styles have been introduced. There is a prunnelle shape of pink or blue striped silks made up with satin; one of pink edged with fine plaitings of satin, the front of the dress cut away to show a long vest front of pink satin in fine shirrings, and over this the lace in the duchesse blonde, and a soft silver-gray crape de Chine, with plaitings and ruches lined with cardinal satin, having a closely-shirred vest of satin.

Many new and fanciful designs are added this year to ordinary styles for boys' wear. From two and a half years up there are kilted suits of cardinal and Middlesex flannel, with rosettes and jabot of the Continental style, of light, fawn-colored gray; these are called the "Washington." Another style, in the same flannel, has a long, plaited blouse with semi-circular and belt of gray; this is the "Lafayette;" both of these styles can be worn by little girls.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Beet Sugar.

THE following paper, by George May Powell, on beet sugar, was read at a recent meeting of the Agricultural Section of the American Institute, New York City:

"Divide and Conquer" is a favorite maxim in military and in political contests. The beet sugar industry has been assailed with misleading statements of ponderous grand totals of expenses necessary to carry it on. The heavy estimates of the Old World were known to be competent to cope with these conditions. Our own people, however, have shrunk from incurring the heavy total expense of the whole industry at every point where its establishment in part, if not complete, would be desirable. From $50,000 to $250,000 have been supposed to be required to begin even at any locality where people might wish to establish beet-sugar making. It is not however necessary that sufficient capital should be massed together to cover the expense of both the agricultural and the manufacturing departments of the industry. It is susceptible of a division which will make it a conquest for our country at an early day, much more practicable than would be possible without such division. As beet sugar is chemically identical with cane sugar, the refineries at all our great commercial centers for the latter, are equally good for the former. Refineries are the major cost of the manufactures element involved. Their cost is already to a great extent provided for as above suggested. Statements recently current in the newspapers that the simple machineries needed to make sugar-cake, and to boil down maple-sap, are sufficient to make crude sugar from fresh beets, to send to refineries, may be received with some question. We are specifically advised, by experienced beet-sugar makers, that these operations are too imperfect to be profitable. As far as we know, the record also shows that over a quarter of a century of experimenting in making sugar from corn-stalks, has failed to produce an article which the poorest people will not prefer to use unrefined cane sugar. We mention these points to prevent our being so much divided on the great subject as to be unequally fitted for the task of conquering it. The cost of all that is needed to make unrefined sugar from fresh beets and dried beets have been very much reduced, of late years, in Europe; but more of this in future papers. Drying-kilns are the most hopeful means of reduction of cost, at present. Mr. Gennert, formerly of Charlestown, Ill., and known charge of the beet sugar work in Maine, writes me that a mill costing $5,000, and drying from twenty to thirty tons of beets in twenty-four hours. Five and a quarter tons of good beets, properly dried, will make a ton of dry beet, containing half a ton of unrefined sugar. Therefore kilns scattered over the agricultural sections of the country, hundreds of miles from the sugar factories, greatly reduce the number of factories demanded. Mr. Gennert also says that he has good dried beets in his possession which are three years old. The drying in the sun evidently seems to be the key to the manufacturing part of the question. The agricultural operation connected therewith are the main point; and "the way we have always done" we can raise beets containing a sufficient percentage of saccharine matter to make the industry pay." is the focus of that point. We believe we can make this practically clear without any puzzling calculations or other scientific terms not understood by the farmer. The answer is this: Wherever a man can raise, what in quantity would be called a good crop of common potatoes, which are of a quality that are dry and mealy when boiled or roasted, he can raise beets for sugar making to advantage. We believe, as we suggested in a former paper, that the chief reason for splitting up cane fields is not lack of material gain to our country of keeping gold from being sent abroad for sugar, several times the gain amount as the entire annual yield of gold mines. The transcendentally great loss in furnishing work to millions of unskilled as well as skilled laborers, and thereby, measurably saving many men, women and children from worse evils, is the chief reason, for the last reason, is the work the Maryland Council has undertaken. If this, we think, far more a moral than a material issue. Scattering practical facts among the people through the medium of the press. Memorializing the State Legislatures to change the appropriations of not less than from $70,000 to several times such a sum by each of the Northern States and most of the Southern States for the development of this industry in their own territory. These and such as these are the points aimed at, as we understand it, by the Council.

The soil and climate of a large majority of the whole country is adapted to the good work. From the Canada line almost down to the Gulf of Mexico beet sugar beets can be raised. Beets with quite as large per cent. of sugar as these now forming the basis of profitable sugar business on a gigantic scale in France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Sweden and elsewhere in Europe. The mountainous western parts of the Carolinas, and the eastern portions of Kentucky and Tennessee, as well as Maryland and the Virginias, are perhaps quite as good as the New England and Middle States. The Valley of the Missouri we believe to be superior to the Mississippi Valley. In much, it not all, of Kansas, beet sugar is soon to become one of the greatest of our National industries.

—"Mr. Moody," says the Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette of Oct. 25, "looked last evening hardly a day older than when last here, ten years ago. He is somewhat more round, and this makes his look shorter than heis. His black whiskers are covering this greater part of his face begin to take a slightly gray tinge around the edges, but otherwise he seems to have undergone no change for the worse. He was dressed in a black cassimere suit last evening, and wore a small piecadilly collar, and not a semblance of jewelry. His voice is still powerful and piercing as of old, with an occasional Yankee twang, and can be easily heard in the largest hall. He speaks with vehemence at times, and seems to have lost none of the fire of his earlier years."

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—The following are taken from the Agricultural columns of the Iowa State Register:

Now is the time to fatten hogs. Corn fed now yields twice the return it will if fed in December.

Some farmers are counted unreasonable if they lend their farming tools and then grumble if they have to go three times to get them.

Young farmer, never fear that you will ever know more than will be appreciated. The world does homage to intelligence wherever found.

Plants in our houses give out oxygen to be consumed by human beings, and absorb carbon, which has been exhaled as waste from the human body.

Let the great truth pierce your ears as an angel's trumpet. Scrub stock of all kinds must be abandoned. Farmers must awake from their lethargy.

There are two secrets to have stock mature early. One is in breeding and raising the right kind of stock, and, secondly, good feed and good care.

It used to be thought impossible to break a colt without a whip. But sense and experience have taught that an apple is better than a lash, and a carrot is better than a blow.

Yankee Reed contends that any man who keeps a bright hog can raise any quantity of small fruit in this climate; but the climate is not suitable for such berries if the farmer's tools be rusty.

No farmer should be ashamed of his plain clothes, either on the farm or at the market places. Jean pants or bargan sleeve are no evidence of inferiority, no more than fine broadcloth and jewelry are evidence of nobility.

In these adverse times farmers should recollect that ships, freighted for distant shores, do not turn about at the first adverse wind, but best onward straight or oblique to the point laid down in the sailing orders. Grand example for equivocating men.

Alcohol applied immediately will give instant relief to burns and scalds, and generally prevent blistering. If it is a part of the body that cannot be immersed in the alcohol, apply it with a piece of cotton wet with it. Keep it saturated with it. Avoid the fire when using it, as it is inflammable.

Every individual case and condition of the period point to the necessity of concentrating the energies and means of the average farmer on a smaller area of land, and giving to that the most thorough culture and all the manure possible. The profit of farming—if a profit is to be had—must come from crops of a larger yield and improved quality.

Apples are the best articles of which to make vinegar. If cider cannot be cheaply obtained, take apples and mash them, or cook them, and pour away until vinous fermentation is exhausted. Then strain off, through a close cotton strainer. Fill one-half demijhon or jug full, and leave the stopper out until acetous fermentation discharges the wine. Then cork tightly, keeping it where it will not freeze. The vessel of vinegar can be replenished as it is used out. Apple peelings, if carefully set in a warm place, will the clear juice put into the vinegar, will always keep a plenty on hand.

Farming for Profit.

WHILE many farmers have been used to consider that stock growing and feeding and the raising of grain on the same farm cannot be so economically carried out as to make the farm essentially a stock or a grain farm, the better class of our farmers well know that the fertility of a farm cannot be kept up successfully unless it is stocked with animals fully sufficient at least to consume all the rougher products of the land. While it is true that new land may produce grain exclusively for some years, without apparent serious diminution of its fertility, it is a fact nevertheless, that when the lack of fertility does become apparent to the eye and the pocket of the owner, the cost of restoring the fertility of the land is out of all proportion to the exhaustion. This is indeed true in any case. Hence it is evident that, farming on the basis of artificial fertilization by commercial manures may cost more than the products sold. The land has been depleted at a cost greater than that at which it may be restored. Hence, again, it is evident, and a proposition well understood by intelligent farmers, that mixed farming is the most profitable in the end.

In all new countries the settler must perforce depend upon such crops as will bring cash returns soonest. Upon all soils adapted to its cultivation this is wheat, but in who continues its cultivation at the expense of other crops soon finds himself losing ground, and at last he finds he must climb the up grade toward mixed farming or else sell out for what he can get and commence anew. Those who wisely stock their farms early and thenceforward carry as large a proportion of meadow and pasture and such other crops as food and fatten stock cheaply, become not only the best farmers but the richest in any country adapted to general farming.

In many sections of the East, farmers, years ago, upon the advent of cheap meat by railway from the West, made up their minds that the fattening of stock would no longer be profitable, and turned their attention especially to the production of grain and such crops as were not supposed to be capable of long transportation. They soon found that those crops must have manure. Now manure cannot be made on the farm without stock, and recourse was had to commercial fertilizers. But this class of fertilizers, however admirable in themselves, are not a pabulum sufficient. Hence they are returning to the good old mode, and the one that has brought English agriculture to its present state of high art. Not that we would ignore commercial fertilizers. They are good in their places, but will not supersede manures which act both mechanically and chemically.

Eastern farmers, finding that they must have home-made manurres, began to buy Western steers for fattening. They also bought Western cheap grains to supplement their own decreased yield. This will always continue since grain is cheaply raised West, and the superior system of feeding East secures not only profit on what they buy but upon the outcome of what they have to sell, since their nearness to the seaboard enables them to take advantage of a rising market. This lesson may be and is being taken advantage of by Western feeders. They are raising year by year a greater area of blue grass and other grasses adapted to early spring, late fall and winter pasturage, and which, when supplemented with the great corn crops of the prairie region of the West, enables them to produce cattle, hogs and sheep at a minimum cost. Such mixed farming gives of short or long standing. He refers to the of increased fertility to the land from the manure naturally made.—Prairie Farmer.

Ice a Luxury Farmers Should Have.

After harvest, when there is leisure, make an artificial pund—a large, deep pond in which fish can be kept and pure ice obtained for the ice-house in winter. One or more such ponds should be made on every farm. There are but few farms that will not admit of just such ponds. They should be surrounded by a fence so as to keep the cattle out, admitting them to the water at but one place. Those who have the interest of their stock in view will see that they are provided, at this season, with an abundance of clear, pure, cold water. The writer was once conversing with a well-to-do farmer on the subject of ice, telling him how easy it was to have a supply that would render the hot season much more endurable. "It is easy for you," he replied, "for you have a large stream of water conveniently, but I have nothing, within four miles, larger than the little run down yonder," pointing to a small brook that ran from one corner of his place to the other. "That is sufficient," we answered, and pointed out to him three or four places where he could dig out small ponds without encroaching on his land one particle. He went right to work with plow and scraper, and in two days had two nice ponds made, which not only furnished plenty of ice for winter, but afforded excellent watering-holes for the boys, and good watering-places for stock during the summer. This was done at a trifling cost of time and money, and the ponds are still in duty, with an occasional dredging which they get during the dryest season. A pile of ice eight feet square and the same height is enough for family use. For such a pile, build the house ten feet square and the same height. The ice must be set on a floor of sawdust all around the ice—sides, bottom and top. The house can be made on the most economical plan possible—two frames of four-inch stuff for sides and top, nailing the boards on these uprights. Only a single wall is needed. —New England Farmer.

The National Scourge.

It is estimated that the annual damages caused by the ravages of insects and worms upon the crops of the United States alone. Truly an enormous loss! Yet it stinks into insignificance when compared with the ravages of that more terrible scourge, Consumption, which annually sweeps hundreds of thousands of human souls into eternity. The causes of consumption are various, depending in every instance on the peculiar habit of the diseased upon the scrofulous diathesis, or temperament, which is in all cases the same cause which will produce in one person an attack of bilious fever, in another a fit of rheumatism, will engender consumption in a person of scrofulous habit. That consumption can be cured by proper treatment will be readily perceived when the exact nature of the disease is understood, viz., the accumulation and deposition of scrofulous matter (tubercles) in the lungs. Obviously, the principal remedies required are (1) a powerful alterative, or blood-purifier, to arrest the accumulations and also cleanse the blood of its scrofulous matter, and (2) a mild cathartic to expel the diseased matter from the system. This course of treatment, in conjunction with a strict hygienic regimen, will in the most successful manner, and in the majority of cases, effect a cure of curing this disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets are the best alterative and cathartic remedies before the public, and have been alone used in thousands of cases of consumption with the most marked efficacy. Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, at Buffalo, N. Y., affords special and unequaled advantages to consumptives, not only possessing the best medical and hygienic means of treatment, but having the essential advantage of being situated in a climate where the inhabitants are notably free from this disease.

NATURE'S REMEDY.
VEGETINE
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER
CURES HER.
DR. H. R. STEVENS, HILLSBORO, O.
Dear Sirs:—I must state that your Vegetine deserves to be called a valuable blood purifier, regulator and invigorator of the whole system. My wife was troubled for a length of time with a complaint peculiar to the fair sex. She took several bottles of Vegetine. The results were surprising. It cured her, while all the former remedies failed to give satisfaction. Respectfully, T. F. TRICE.

DR. JOHN BULL'S
Smith's Tonic Syrup
FEVER and ACUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER.
The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases one bottle has been sufficient for a cure, and white families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if it is not continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken a dose or two doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.
The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle, do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

FELLOWS'
Compound Syrup
is composed of Ingredients Identical with those of the Human Blood, Muscle, Nerve and Brain Tissue. Will cure all blood disorders dependent upon some of these.

Dr. Howe's Testimony.
During the past few years I have given Fellows' Compound Hypophosphites a fair though limited trial, and what severe trial it my practice. In restoring nervous energy, toning the system, and gradually infusing healthy vitality into the blood, I constantly recommend its use in all affections of the throat and lungs, and in general cases where it has given relief, and the patients are fast recovering. Among those are consumptive and all threatening lung troubles, where I have received other modes of treatment. For tonic, or blood purifier, I consider it unsurpassed. I have no interest in it, and know of nothing equal to it. WM. E. HOWE, M. D.

THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, PUBLISHER AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, NOV. 19, - - 1878

For President in 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Nov. 8, 1878

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Of all foul deeds, the foulest one upon which the heavens have looked for many a day, was that discovered by the sexton of St. Mark's Church, on Thursday morning. Upon opening the Church gate, it became evident that the grave had been invaded during the night." A dark lantern and a shovel lay in the loose, freshly upturned earth, directly over the vault in which the body of the late A. T. Stewart was deposited, and a hasty examination of the premises revealed the astounding fact that the body of the late millionaire had been removed

The startling intelligence was at once sent to police headquarters, and Commissioner Nichols in company with ex Judge Hilton, (the present head of the house of A. T. Stewart & Co.) proceeded to the spot, where it was found that one of the flags stones which covered the opening of the iron grated vault, was out of place. A small aperture about twenty five inches square was thus made, and through it the thieves must have crept to effect their nefarious work. The vault occupies a commanding position, being in the centre of the Churchyard which fronts on second avenue. Three large recesses line the huge chamber over the tomb, and their dark shades afford ample protection to the sacrilegious, who must have been concerned in the robbery. The vault is constructed of brick, and is arched at the top. The floor is twelve feet below the surface of the ground, and a granite stone staircase leads to the bottom of the vault, which is a room eight by ten feet. When Mr. Stewart's body was placed there on the 10th of April, 1876, it had three receptacles, first, a coffin of oak, covered with velvet cloth, then a leaden case, hermetically sealed, and lastly a heavy cedar box.

The thieves, after unscrewing the lid of the outer box, cut open the leaden case which enclosed the casket, with a knife, showing that the work was not done by professionals who would have brought the ever present "jimmy" into play.

The leaden case once cut through, the removal of the body was only the work of a moment at first, though it seems almost incredible that such an act could be successful and secretly accomplished in so public and exposed a place as St. Marks Church yard, but the explanatory circumstance is that the heat covered by the policeman on second avenue, extends half a mile above and below the scene of the robbery, giving ample time for the thieves to hit the body of Mr. Stewart from the place it in some suitable receptacle, carry it across the Church yard, and lift it over the high iron fence into a wagon.

In looking about for a motive for this outrage, that which stands out in greatest prominence is — reward for the recovery of the body. Judge Hilton declares that no reward whatever will be offered, and how the wretched matter will end is past finding out until some new light is thrown on the subject. There has been a prevailing idea that a great quantity of gold and valuables was buried with the body, and since the discovery of the loss, it has come out that about a month ago the sexton discovered that the marble slab at the head of the vault had been tampered with, and to deceive any person intending to rob the grave, this slab was moved about twenty five feet from the true entrance.

This shocking occurence has excited universal and deep indignation not only against the criminals, but against the police authorities. The latter cannot ignore the popular feeling, and this circumstance, together with the prominence of the outraged family, has instituted them to great activity. Every available detective is employed on the case and the scene of police headquarters is one of much excitement. The nature of the object stolen renders its success to conceal most next to impossible and the arrest of those guilty in human form is almost hourly expected. It will go hard with them if caught; for the necessity of making an example of them is only too evident. As Mr. William Libby (Mr. Stewart's partner) exclaimed on hearing of the robbery: "It is atrocious, diabolical! A city in which even the dead are not permitted to rest is a good city to get away from. There does not seem to be any protection."

It was the intention of the family to remove Mr. Stewart's remains to a final resting place in the magnificent mausoleum now building at Garden City, Long Island and should they be recovered, this disposition will probably be made of them.

With the usual noisy demonstrations about the polling places, and the flashing of excitement lights around the offices of newspapers, so-called political parties have met, fought and disbanded, with no one killed, (if I except poor following who long fingered in the cellar of his home upon hearing of Tammany's defeat. He had been promised a position in case of its success, and he could not stand up under his disappointment.

Yes, Tammany Hall which ever since Tweed's time has stood, among the thoroughly lowest men of all parties, as a synonym for political trickery and corruption, has at last been overthrown, vanquished, shusted" As Sachem Kelly announces in a lofty ring, crowd of reporters on election night, he was "routed all along the line." During this contest, party lines were lost in time in the general determination to get out from under the heel of Tammany. Tammany, in turn, moved to desperate endeavors by the unwonted opposition, centered its energies on the one task of electing its Mayor, Augustus Schell, envious of what should be some of the rest of its ticket. But it was of no avail. New York had made up its mind. Edward Cooper received nearly twenty thousand majority, and John Kelly has gone to meet Boss Butler. His record is very gratifying, if for no other reason than that it shows that this city is neither distracted nor sunk in apathy. But, on the other hand, it will not do to crow too easily before we get out of the woods. Tammany is both subtle and powerful, and there have been such things known as its getting hold of opposition candidates after the election of the latter, and quietly leading them into the Wigwam. We must wait and see whether it will succeed in capturing Mr. Cooper.

RADIX.

The Revival of Prosperity.

The thunder of the elections is dying away to its last rolling echoes; the stormy excitement, and the passion of partisan prejudice, have cleared off; the public has already looked about and observed what immediate damage and good have been done; and it is now time to take a clear, sensible, comprehensive business view of the situation and its promises for the future.

In the first place, the results of the elections have settled it beyond controversy that this nation will certainly resume specie payments on the first day of January next. Whether you like it or not cannot now alter this inevitable conclusion. It is wise, manly, and necessary to cease railing against unalterable fate, and look the coming fact squarely in the face. Its intelligent and honorable men, and resolve to make the best and the most of it. It is wise and patriotic to lay aside a partisanship and opposition which are no longer of any avail, and, therefore, childish, and resolve that the policy which the country has finally and firmly adopted shall be made, so far as any help of yours can make it a grand success. On the first day of next January we shall begin a new year, and a new era, by resuming specie payments. In so doing, we shall resume something greater and higher than mere gold and silver—these United States will resume their high and honorable place among the nations of the earth as one of the great powers whose lightest word of promise is just as good as gold and will soon be considered as valuable as gold wherever a ship carries our flag, or a traveler carries our currency. It rests with the people to decide whether we shall also, on that day, resume something highest and noblest of all—our common brotherhood and pride of patriotism, which will sustain, perfect and enlarge the American financial policy, then and therefore to go into effect, with a universal and patriotic support and encouragement. Along with our resumption of the money of the world, and our resumption of our high place among the nations of the world, let us also resume our national brotherhood of patriotism in support of our new American policy. Is here any good reason why we should not do so wise a thing?

One other thing has been settled by the elections. The American nation will pay every dollar of its bonds, and all other forms of its debt, in coin or its equivalent—every dollar. We are going to be honest and honorable to the last item of our obligations. Any further opposite agitation of any kind or degree, to rattle or get rid of any of our public obligations upon any other bases than square and honorable payment in full, at par—any possible plan to get off by paying anything less than par—is a waste of time, a waste of ingenuity we may be permitted for saying (because that is what all the rest of the world says) a waste of—morality. All such schemes and allegations, to escape this inevitable fact are utterly futile, and the best thing that can be done is to abandon them.

Our financial system for the future, looking now, in its main features, unalterably settled upon that basis which has been approved by the financial and commercial experience of all nations and of all history, nothing wise remains for us than to take hold with the old time American energy, pluck, and patience, of the work of restoring business activity and commercial prosperity. The eyes of the whole world will to welcome us the moment we enter them with the money of the world. Business of all kinds has been of late been paralized by the uncertainties of politics than by any other cause. It is already reviving. All accounts from all parts of the country bring encouraging tidings to that effect now that the uncertainty is over, and financial policy is fixed, confidence will be promoted and American skill be given the fair opportunity it has never yet failed to improve.—Post & Tribune

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Chester, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

General News Summary.

THE STATE ELECTIONS.

ELECTIONS were held in many of the States, on the 5th, with the following results, as far as heard from on the morning of the 12th:

Alabama—Very few returns received, but all Democratic candidates believed to be elected. The vote was light and the election quiet.

Alabama—It is believed that all the Democratic candidates for Congress are elected except in the Eighth District, where Lowe (Ind.) is returned.

Connecticut—Legislature Republican. No election of Governor by the people. The Republicans elect three Congressmen—a gain of two.

Dakota Territory—Bennett (Rep.) elected delegate to Congress by about 1,500 majority.

Delaware—John W. Hall, Dem., was elected Governor, and Edward Martin, Dem., elected to Congress. Republicans ran no ticket for either of these, the only opposition being the Nationals.

Florida—The Democrats carry the First Congressional District, and the Republicans probably the Second, being the same, politically, as the present Congress.

Georgia—The contest for Congressmen was between regular and independent Democratic candidates. Stephens is re-elected in the Eighth; Persons (elected in the First District) is a Greenback Democrat. In the Seventh and Ninth Districts the Independent candidates are elected.

Illinois—Republican State ticket elected. Legislature Republican on joint ballot. Chicago and Cook County elect the entire Republican county ticket, and the Republican candidates for Congress—Aldrich, Davis and Barber—in the First, Second and Third Districts—are also elected—being a gain of one Congressman in the Second. J. R. Thomas (Rep.) is elected to Congress in the Eighteenth District, being another Republican gain, and Stevenson (Dem. and Greenback) is elected in the Twentieth District, being a Democratic gain. Allen P. Forsyth (National Greenback) is elected in the Fifteenth District, formerly Democratic.

Kansas—State, Legislature and Congressmen Republican.

Kentucky—Democratic candidates for Congress generally elected, except in the First District, where Turner (Ind. Dem.) is elected over the regular nominee, and in the Ninth, where Dills (Rep.) is elected—a gain of one.

Louisiana—Democratic by a large majority. Entire Congressional delegation Democratic—a gain of one.

Maryland—The Republicans gain one Congressman—the delegation consisting of five Democrats and one Republican.

Massachusetts—Talbot (Rep.) has a majority of about 26,000 over Butler (National) for Governor. About polled but comparatively a small vote, the contest being between Talbot and Butler. The latter carried the City of Boston by about 4,000 majority. All the Republican candidates for Congress are elected except in the Fourth District.

Mississippi—Meager returns; opposition to the Democracy very slight.

Michigan—Crowell (Rep.), for Governor, has a plurality of about 40,000. The opposition vote was divided rather evenly between the Democrats and Nationals. Entire Congressional delegation Republican—a gain of one in the First District. Legislature largely Republican.

Missouri—Democratic State ticket elected by a large majority. All the Congressmen Democratic except in the Ninth District, in which Ford (National Greenback) is elected—a Democratic gain of four.

Montana—Republican State ticket elected by over 10,000 majority. Legislature Republican. First and Third Congressional Districts Republican; Second Democratic—being a gain of one for the Democrats.

Nebraska—Republican State and Congressional tickets elected by over 10,000 majority. Legislature Republican.

Nevada—Daggett (Rep.) is elected Congressman by 503 or 603 majority.

North Carolina—Republicans claimed a gain of two Congressmen, in the First and Third Districts, the delegation being composed of five Democrats and three Republicans.

Ohio—Republican State ticket elected. The Republicans elect the four Congressmen—a gain of one. Heal (Rep.) elected Governor by a majority of 488 over all opposition. The vote stood: Heal, 88,063; McKeen (Dem.), 31,083; Brown (Greenback), 6,385; Prohibition and scattering, 129.

New Jersey—Republicans probably elect five of the seven Congressmen—a gain of two.

New York—Legislature largely Republican. The Republican candidate for Judge of the Court of Appeals elected. The Republicans claimed twenty-five of the thirty-three Congressmen—a gain of eight. In the City of New York the Anti-Tammany and Republican ticket, headed by Cooper for Mayor, was elected by a majority of over 10,000.

Pennsylvania—Republican by over 20,000 on State ticket. Legislature largely Republican. Congressional delegation, eighteen Republicans—a gain of one; Eight Democrats, and one Greenbacker.

Rhode Island—The two Congressional Districts Republican by about the average majorities.

South Carolina—Largely Democratic. Congressional delegation all Democratic—a gain of three.

Tennessee—Election quiet and a light vote cast. Marks, Dem., for Governor, has a large majority. The Congressional delegation will be composed of nine Democrats and one Republican—a Democratic gain of one.

Texas—State ticket elected by about the usual Democratic majority; not more than a two-thirds vote polled. No change in Congressional delegation.

Virginia—Congressional delegation will probably stand eight Democrats or Conservatives to one Republican—same as in the present Congress.

Vermont—The special election in the Third Congressional District resulted in the election of Bradley Barlow (Greenbacker).

Wisconsin—Congressmen, five Republicans and three Democrats—same as in Forty-fifth Congress. Legislature largely Republican.

Wyoming Territory—Downey (Rep.) elected Delegate to Congress by about 900 majority.

DOMESTIC.

AT a fire in a St. Louis tenement house, on the 6th, Christ Mueller and Mrs. Kettering were fatally burned.

FROM the second annual report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, it appears that the cost of inland mail transportation for the fiscal year ending June 30 was $16,034,021. Cost of railway mail transportation, $9,500,500. Estimate for the next year for inland mail transportation, $20,700,000.

THE discovery was made, in New York City, on the 7th, that the remains of the late A. T. Stewart had been, the night before, stolen from the family vault in St. Mark's Church-yard. The casket was found broken open and the body was missing. The police were notified. It was thought the body had been stolen in the hope that a reward would be offered for its recovery.

THE Treasury Department purchased 500,000 ounces of silver, on the 7th.

AT a meeting of the Cabinet, in Washington, on the 8th, Secty McCrary submitted reports showing that peace and quiet prevailed on the Rio Grande, with a fair prospect of continuance.

A JEWELRY store on Eighth avenue, between Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth streets, New York, was robbed, on the evening of the 7th, a large number of persons witnessing the job. A thief stole two men entered the store, one of whom closed the door and the other stood guard over the merchant and his clerks with drawn revolvers. Two confederates stood outside and ordered the crowd away, while another broke the window-cases and gathered up a bag full of watches and chains. The thieves got away with their plunder.

THERE were in the United States Treasury, on the 9th, $548,500,700 in Government bonds to secure bank circulation, and $19,808,600 to secure public deposits. It was stated, unofficially that after the first of January next, as an aid to the resumption of specie payments, it was very likely the Treasury Department will send to parties desiring it the standard silver dollar in quantities of $1,000 and upward, free of transportation, in exchange for like sums of greenbacks deposited with disbursing banks.

THE Village of Cape May, a noted summer watering-place on the Atlantic coast, was almost destroyed by fire on the morning of the 9th. The fire originated in the attic of the Ocean House, and, fed by high winds, spread thence to the principal hotels and cottages adjacent thereto, nearly all of which were totally destroyed. About forty acres were burned over, and the aggregate loss is stated to be $700,000. The fire was incendiary in its origin.

A DISPATCH from Pembina, D. T., on the 8th, says Sheriff W. H. Anderson, of Dallas, Tex., who was in pursuit of William Collins, of the famous band of train-robbers, found him in the former place and attempted to arrest him. Collins resisted, and the men exchanged fire with fatal effect—both dropping dead in two minutes.

IN another letter to Minister Welsh, on the subject of the Halifax award, Secty Evarts takes direct issue with the finding of the Commission, both as to the amount of the award and the manner in which it was rendered, holding that the sum of $5,500,000 is an outrageous and utterly indefensible price to place upon the benefits of twelve years of fishing in Canadian waters, and that, if paid at all by the United States, it must be regarded as covering the value of those benefits in perpetuity, and not for any term of years, and that the adoption of this or any other award by the Commission, by a bare majority, is not in accordance with the terms of the treaty providing for the Commission, and that the award is not, therefore, binding upon the Government.

THREE brothers, named James, David and John Tabor, owned and operated a farm near Chenango, N. Y. James and David disagreed as to how it should be run. A few days ago, David killed James with a pitchfork and then went into an adjoining wood and blew out his brains with a shot-gun.

GEORGE B. FESSLER, the defaulting Treasurer of Stark County, Ohio, pleaded guilty to the charge of embezzlement, on the 11th, and was sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary, and to pay a fine of $10,000.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

NOT many minutes after being informed of his election, on the evening of the 5th, Alexander Smith, Republican Congressman-elect from the Twelfth (N. Y.) District, died from acute gastritis, occasioned by overwork and exposure during his canvass.

ON the 7th, Capt. Condon, the released Fenian, called upon the President and warmly thanked him for securing his release from prison.

ON the 8th, Mrs. A. T. Stewart offered a reward of $25,000 for the recovery of the stolen body of her late husband and the conviction of the thieves. A proportionate sum would be paid for the recovery of the body.

ACCORDING to a New York telegram of the 8th, the liabilities of Dodd, Brown & Co., of St. Louis, are $1,700,110. Actual available assets, $990,000.

THE New York Commercial Advertiser of the 8th contains a table of the next National House of Representatives, in which the Democrats are given 144 Congressmen; the Republicans, 132, and Greenbackers, 18, with California yet to elect.

GOV. HAMPTON, of South Carolina, met with a narrow escape accident, on the 8th, hunting, the Governor's mule became frightened, and, the bridle breaking, he leaped from the saddle. By the fall, the Governor's right leg was broken in two places, the bone protruding, and his ankle was badly hurt.

The Republican majorities in Iowa at the October election, on the State ticket, are given officially, as follows: For Secretary of State, 10,067; Auditor, 14,844; Treasurer, 10,738; Register of Land Office, 9,945; Attorney-General, 15,196; Supreme Judge, 8,744; Supreme Clerk, 11,843; Reporter of Supreme Court, 10,936.

HENRY GREENBAUM, formerly President of the German-American Savings Bank, of Chicago, has been held to bail in the sum of $25,000 to answer to the charge of embezzling $20,000 of the funds of that institution.

NORMAN B. JUDD, formerly United States Minister to Berlin and a Member of the Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses, died in Chicago, on the morning of the 11th, aged sixty-three years.

YELLOW-FEVER NEWS.

THE Board of Health of New Orleans, on the 7th, adopted a resolution declaring it safe for absentees from that city to return. Two deaths on that day; no new cases.

ONE new case in Vicksburg, on the 7th. No deaths.

NO DEATHS in Memphis, on the 7th. Three new cases of fever were reported.

A NUMBER of new cases of yellow fever were reported at Hickman, Ky., on the 8th. Weather very quiet.

CLEAR and pleasant weather prevailed at New Orleans, on the 10th. One yellow-fever death had occurred within twenty-four hours. One death at Jackson, Miss., on the 8th; two new cases on the 10th, one a refugee. No new cases or deaths at Chattanooga, Tenn., or Vicksburg, Miss., on the 9th.

THERE were no deaths and no new cases in New Orleans or Vicksburg during the twenty-four hours, ending at six p. m., on the 11th. Five cases were reported at Jackson, Miss., since the night of the 9th, two of which would probably prove fatal.

ELMWOOD CEMETERY, at Memphis, was thronged with people, on the 10th, looking at the hundreds of new-made graves, and mourning for the loved and lost. In many instances persons were unable to find the graves of departed friends. Most of the visitors had recently returned to the city. Many of the graves were unmarked, and it was not easy for friends to find where rested the remains of their lost loved ones. It was a sad sight to witness the bowed forms hovering over the graves all through the cemetery.

FOREIGN.

ST. PETERSBURG dispatches of the 5th say that it had been officially denied there that the Russian officers were participating in or encouraging the insurrection in Bulgaria.

THOMAS AHERN, the last of the English Fenian prisoners, has been released from custody.

THE negotiations between Russia and the Vatican have been suspended, the latter Power claiming that the attitude of Russia is such as to promise no satisfactory results.

IN San Salvador, on the evening of Oct. 6, a disastrous earthquake occurred. The Towns of Jucuapa, Nueva, Guadalupe, Santiago de Maria and Chiramecu were entirely destroyed, and many persons lost their lives.

A REUTLIN telegram of the 6th says Russia had repeated, confidentially, her previous assurance that she was resolved to faithfully carry out the provisions of the Berlin Treaty.

A TREMENDOUS snow-storm recently occurred in Austria. In Vienna the trees were broken down by the weight of snow, and telegraph lines, within a radius of 100 miles, were prostrated. In one day, the snow was several feet deep in that city.

THE Hungarian Diet had rejected the motion for the impeachment of the Ministry by a vote of 170 to 95.

JOHN GRAY & CO., iron founders, in Scotland, have failed for a large amount. W. Wilson & Co., printers, of Alexandria, Egy., have also failed. Liabilities, $400,000.

IT was announced in London, on the 6th, that Russian pirates were operating in the vicinity of Nova Zembla.

A LISBON dispatch announces that Portugal, France and England had formed an alliance to punish the King of Dahomey.

ON the 7th, an attempt was made to assassinate Gen. Broque, formally Spanish Minister of War. The Madrid authorities arrested the would-be assassin, who proved to be an ex-soldier.

BARON PICLET, the discoverer of the liquefaction of oxygen, is reported hopelessly ill in Geneva, Switzerland.

THE Russian occupation of Roumania has ceased.

THE Bonbar Coal Company, of Edinburgh, Scotland, suspended on the 9th. The liabilities aggregate £734,000.

OVER one-half of the cotton mills in the District of Asiout-under-Lyon have suspended work in consequence of trade depression.

THE Paris Exposition was formally closed on the afternoon of the 10th. The total receipts since the opening have been 12,653,745 francs.

AUSTRIA has granted general amnesty to the Bosnian and Herzegovinian insurgents.

ACCORDING to a Simla telegram of the 10th, the difficulty with Afghanistan was in a fair way to be adjusted. It was believed and announced that Russia was exercising a pressure upon the Ameer with this end in view. It was also announced that the Ameer had withdrawn from Candahar, and that Russia would occupy that place and Herat.

THE Russians have reoccupied the territory adjacent to the Gulf of Saros.

A WINNIPEG (Manitoba) dispatch to the St. Paul Pioneer-Press of the 10th says a war had broken out between the Sioux and Blackfeet and Assiniboine Indians. Several of the latter had been killed, and serious trouble was feared.

PARIS dispatches of the 7th say that negotiations were pending for a conference of the Powers to revise the Treaty of Berlin.

ACCORDING to a Constantinople dispatch of the 7th, the Bulgarian insurgents had burned fourteen villages in the District of Demotica.

KNIGHT & SON, Liverpool merchants, have failed for $500,000. Robert Forrester, a large Glasgow colliery proprietor, has also failed, owing $2,500,000.

ABOUT $450,000 have been subscribed in London for the relief of the shareholders of the suspended City of Glasgow Bank.

THE health of the Czar has become exceedingly precarious, and fears of his speedy demise are generally entertained at the Russian capital.

THE Cabinet lately constructed in Greece has again fallen apart in consequence of a vote of want of confidence in the Chambers. On the 8th, another Cabinet was formed.

ACCORDING to a Constantinople dispatch of the 8th, it had transpired that the Russian Army was constructing two lines of defense about Adrianople.

IT was reported, in London, on the 8th, that Schouvaloff, Russian Minister, had been recalled and appointed Gortschakoff's successor.

TELEGRAMS from Northern and Eastern Europe report an extensive snow-fall on the 7th and 8th.

ACCORDING to Constantinople dispatches of the 11th, Midhat Pasha had been appointed Governor-General of Syria.

THE Porte has granted local government and a Constitution to Eastern Roumelia.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Minister Bayard Taylor has submitted to an operation for dropsy, and it is found that his kidneys and liver are seriously affected. The operation was successful and his condition is favorable.

—"If Dr. Schliemann," says a foreign critic, "discovered a tomb in the bed of the Busento near Cosenza, with all its treasures, he would have much more reason to conclude it was the tomb of Alaric than he has now to inaugurate he has found the tomb of Agamemnon at Mycenæ."

—Gen. Grant witnessed the attempted assassination of King Alphonso. He was standing, when the shot was fired, at a window of the Hotel de Paris in Madrid, overlooking the Puerta del Sol, where he was watching the progress of the royal cavalcade which had just passed before him. He clearly saw the flash of the assassin's pistol.

—Jefferson Davis has been singularly addicted in the death of his sons. Joseph H. Davis fell from the piazza of the Executive Mansion in Richmond during the war and was killed; William Davis died of diphtheria in Memphis in 1873, and Jefferson, the only surviving son, has, as already announced, recently died in Memphis of the yellow fever.

—The only private mortuary chapel in the United States is in Oakwood Cemetery, Troy, N. Y. It belongs to the wealthy Warren families. It is built of stone, with a vault underneath, and has handsome appurtenances of Episcopal worship, elaborate adornments and a stained window of great value. The only services held there are at the burials of members of the family.

—A nephew of Col. Robert Ingersoll was cruelly lazed at Cornell University. He was bound hand and foot, gagged, and then taken to a stone wall. Here he was suspended head downward, and was given to understand that unless he would do as he was bidden he would be dropped to the pavement. His request was shaved off, his face colored and his clothes ruined with paint.

—Mr. Henry Bergh has been much impressed by the efforts of a Georgia lady to found a Society for the Prevention of Animals. He writes to the President of a branch society in Savannah: "Suppose the Society were composed of such public-spirited and benevolent ladies, instead of the fashionable creatures who flirt in the ball-rooms of noted watering resorts, what a blessed abode this planet of ours would be!"

The Cares of Wealth.

A comical incident of the recent sayings-bank run in Poughkeepsie as related by the Eagle, illustrates woman's ways. Two sisters, living with a lady in that city, took alarm and went to their quiet home in the country. She promised them by all means to leave the deposit in the bank. But they didn't; they took it out. And having it in their possession, they were troubled to know where to keep it. So they gave it to the lady to keep till the next morning. It was decided that it should be buried in the earth in a flower-pot standing at the window, and there it was deposited. Having so much money near her, the lady did not sleep well, and she disinterred the precious trust and put it under her pillow. With the early dawn the owners of the money appeared at the lady's room. The door being unlocked, they entered and went directly to the flower-pot. "Oh, my God! my God! I am ruined entirely. The money's gone! They have dug it up." A gentle voice from the bed was heard: "Here, take your money. I lay awake till morning taking care of it, and just as I got asleep you came waking me, and all because you were two fools."—N. Y. Tribune.

THE great demand of the times appears to be a girl who can saw wood, clean house, cook for a family of seven, take care of the baby, wash and iron, "answer the door," light flies, work fifteen hours a day, never get cross, never waste, spoil or lose anything, never go out, never want anything, have no company and be happy, smiling, well-dressed and contented for $1.75 a week.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

MOTHERS, do not let your darlings suffer with the Whooping Cough, if you have a remedy so near at hand. Use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and the little sufferers will soon find relief. Price, 25 cents.

Five Days With Brigands.

Signor Egidio Sarconi, Deputy Vice-Chancellor in the Ministry of Grace and Justice, set out from Rome about the middle of August last, to enjoy his month's holiday at Corieto Perticara, a hamlet in the Basilicata, and about half a day's journey south of Potenza, the chief town of the Province. His family had preceded him thither, and in his eagerness to join it with the least delay possible he stayed no longer in Potenza than to hire a vehicle, accepting in fact the first that offered itself. On he went, anticipating the joyous reception in store for him, and—high legal functionary as he was—thinking nothing of the law and as little of its breakers, when suddenly, some six miles from Potenza, he was aroused from his reverie by two gruff voices bidding the driver pull up. Presently two ablack faces appeared at the window; two rifles were leveled at him; and he was told to alight immediately. Unarmed himself, with no assistance near him for miles around, and the driver most likely in sympathy with his assailants, there was nothing for it but to comply.

Forthwith the brigands bound him hand and foot, carried him up the hill that ascended from the roadside, and on reaching a dense forest of beech trees, deposited him on the ground. They relieved him of all his valuables, including some 100 lire he had about him, and then they told him that unless 5,000 lire were paid for his ransom he would be put to death. Vainly did he plead poverty and protest that his family did not possess that sum. His captors were inexorable, and with many a brutal threat forced him to write to his relatives for the sum required. It was then the night of the 11th, and with his hands and feet bound so tightly that the cords cut his flesh, he had to stretch himself full length on the bare, damp earth, while the brigands slept beside him.

He was the same spot, and very nearly in the same position, he spent the whole night and part of the next day with scarce a morsel of food or a drop to drink, till he received orders to march. His feet were just so far left free as to enable him to walk with difficulty over the mountain paths, and on through dingle and dell, when his swollen and aching limbs forced from him an involuntary cry of pain, his captors would part him before them with the muzzles of their rifles, and keep him in perpetual fear of being shot by accident. Five days and five nights did this bodily and mental torture did he undergo, till on the fifth day a chance of escape peremptorily appeared. The brigands, who always kept him closely bound, had descended to the plain that morning, and returned with a little flock of sheep, which they had stolen on the way. Having eaten their fill and given Signor Sarconi what remained, they all three lay down to a siesta under the shadow of some plum trees.

It was sunset before they rose and resumed their march, Signor Sarconi's feet being left a little freer to enable him to climb the hill over which their journey lay. They had not gone far when he, being always a little ahead of his captors, got a glimpse through the trees of five carabineers who were patrolling the neighborhood. The moment he saw the uniform and the red stripe of their trousers he darted off toward them, though they were a full fifty yards away. By this time the brigands had also seen the carabineers, and without further heed for their captive, they took to their heels in the opposite direction. Signor Sarconi was at once unbound and conveyed under an escort of two carabineers to his overjoyed family at Corieto Perticara, while the other three gave chase to the fugitives. These gentlemen, however, are still at large, and their victim, in spite of all the vexation and ill-usage inflicted on him, has not yet recovered from the privations and actual wounds inflicted on him during his five days' captivity.—*Home Cor. THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

FALLING LEAVES.

No more these spreading shades
Mixed with the tremulous sunshine on the grass
Invite to stretch my limbs, while white clouds pass
Above in fleecy braids.

Dead-line, good-bye, dear leaves!
For yon stern autumn blows his trumpet-call,
Each tree that bears it, ere your glories fall,
In stole silence grieves.

But why entreat your stay
Till winds and rains and chill November air
Have clogged your sap and left you fainting there,
To wither day by day?

I know the time has come
When you must yield to a resistless force,
Farewell, ripe splendors of a summer's course—
Bound for your other home!

In gold and crimson array,
Whirling like children in a dancing group,
Or racing with the wind, a hurrying troop,
Hence, whither who can say?

Heaped on some misty road
Or pavement, where the crowd shall tread you down
And mix you with the rubbish of the town;
Or in some safe shade—

Far from the city's din,
In woodland hollows, mixed with sheltering
Or peaks where soon the ice as with a glass
Shall fetter you,

Or floating down some stream,
To seek your fortune in an unknown sea;
Or blown about lonely fields tumultuously,
Like shadows in a dream.

Perhaps you lovely maid
May choose some bright secretive spot
And range them grouped about her chamber-wall,

Perhaps you rustic's spade

May mix them with the earth,
To fertilize his garden-beds and give
The spring a splendor that shall bloom and live
In resurrection-birth.

Like you, dear leaves, we come
And go, and know not whether we may speed.
We only trust that every path may lead
To an eternal home!

THE FORCE OF A GOOD EXAMPLE.

Hampton street was not the most inviting place in which to take up one's abode. Untidy-looking women stood about the dirty doorways and dilapidated windows, wasting their time in idle gossip; while still more untidy-looking children played about. In every way the air and aspect of the place showed that the essential element of health and comfort, cleanliness, was wanting.

This was the general impression that Hampton Forrester gave to John Trimmer and his wife as they passed slowly down it, eagerly looking to the right and to the left, but no bright cheerful face met their eye; all appeared equally uninviting.

"And yet it must be, John," whispered the wife, as they paused before the only tenantless house in the street, "for there is no other within reach of our means, and you must live near the factory."

"But it is such a place to bring you and the children to!"

"It is not very pleasant;" but acting the part of a true wife, in trying to make the best of things, she added cheerfully, "a little soap and water will work wonders, even in this neighborhood."

So it was settled; and a few days after, Rachel and John Trimmer, with their little family, came to live in Hampton street.

It was very well affected to what they had been accustomed; the house was about the same size, but the pretty white-washed cottage which they had vacated on account of John's change of employment was situated in a far more agreeable locality.

But Mrs. Trimmer was not the woman to make vain lamentations. With her invaluable remedy—"try to make the best of things"—she set herself the task of transforming a very unsightly habitation into a neat and comfortable little dwelling, and by degrees a wonderful change took place in the appearance of the house.

The clear doorway, white step, and polished windows distinguished Number Thirteen from the rest of the street; and was as much an index to the character of the inmates as a patched and clean dress is supposed to be rags and dirt, denotes the disposition of the wearer.

But the occupants of the neighboring houses did not look with favor upon the proval on the new tenants, and many unkindly remarks were passed on them.

"Stuck-up!" said "Gossiping Polly" Mrs. Trimmer was considered, because she evinced no desire to spend half her mornings in gossiping, instead of setting her house in order. And the children, in their neat frocks and pinafores, were decisively termed, "the little ladies," as they passed on their way to home or to school.

Where a kindly disposition exists circumstances are always happening to alter such a state of affairs; and, eventually, the dwellers in Hampton street began to regard the inhabitants of Number Thirteen with more favor.

One summer evening Rachel and her little girls were hastening home from a visit to her sister; and, as was usual on such occasions, they were bearing along with them a small but choice bouquet of roses—the finest that could be procured from Aunt Betsy's little garden.

These flowers were very precious to the Trimmers, and the value of each was enhanced, as the locality in which they now dwelt prevented them from cultivating their own. Nevertheless, on entering Hampton street, when, on passing a group of gossips, a baby in arms bent forward and tried to grasp one of the fragrant treasures, and the mother of the child instinctively drew away the tiny hand, Rachel did not hesitate for a moment, but, with a kind smile, placed one of the finest roses in the outstretched fingers.

Even small as was this act of kindness, it made a favorable impression; and from that time the mother of the flower-loving baby ceased to raise her voice in the general outcry against Mrs. Trimmer, and she took an opportunity of saying:

"Perhaps our men would be happier husbands, and our little ones happier children, if a few more of us copied the ways of Number Thirteen."

And from that date the speaker, Mrs. Riley, was seldom seen chatting outside her cottage door, when her time would have been better employed by making all neat within, for the flower, with its delicate perfume and beauty, conveyed a message of love to that mother's heart, and raised her mind to better things; and as she thought of her own little child, whom she would like to expand into something as fair as the rose itself, she resolved to have things different in her own home, and, before long, another tidy-looking house improved the appearance of Hampton street.

Good examples are sometimes as influential as bad; for some time no one seemed inclined to follow in Mrs. Riley's steps; her old acquaintances rather regarded her with disfavor, and said she was growing as unsociable and unneighborly as some one else in the street.

But, beginning to experience the delights of cleanliness and order, she would not resume her old ways again. Instead, she found a very pleasant and valuable companion in Mrs. Trimmer; for the incident of the flower had opened an acquaintance between them, and Rachel's influence was leading Mrs. Riley to think of even more important duties in life than having a clean and tidy home.

When the church bells rang on a Sunday morning the new tenants were not the only ones in Hampton street now, as formerly, to obey the summons; and Mrs. Riley's husband and elder children wended their steps in that direction, while the mother stayed at home to cook the dinner and mind the baby.

But in the evening, this latter duty being handed to the eldest girl, Mrs. Riley herself, with her good man beside her, took her seat in the church and listened to the "glad tidings" that were sent to her "and to all people."

So the Sundays, which used to be spent very differently in times gone by, were now looked on as blessed days of rest, and as Mrs. Riley told the neighbors, brought strength for the toil of the week.

But some received her well-meant words with derision, while others turned a deaf ear to her admonitions altogether; but all followed their own ways, till another little kindness touched the heart of the dwellers in Hampton street.

In Number Eighteen lived a Mrs. Duncan, who earned a living by charring and washing. On account of her large family, this poor widow had to work hard all the week; yet she would have done pretty well had she been content with her lodgers, but these often failed in their payments; and this, with the dearness of provisions, caused Mrs. Duncan to have a hard time of it.

"There's no hopes of getting my Mary to service while this state of things lasts," she said, despondingly to a neighbor, on her return from work one evening.

"I thought you were looking out a place for her."

"So I was, and one of my ladies told me of a very good one to-day; but it is of no use going after it, for no one would take her without a proper stock of clothes."

"Couldn't you get a few things together?"

"Not now; if I had all that's due to me I might; but I can't press poor Mrs. Adams, ill as she is; she owes me nine shillings, and I know she'll pay me when she can; but my Mary will lose a good situation through it."

At this moment Mrs. Riley passed, and on which, by a happier unsociable, she stopped to inquire how Mrs. Duncan was getting on.

"Not as well as I like, thank you;" and then the poor widow again narrated her difficulties.

Calling on Mrs. Trimmer the next afternoon to ask her advice about making an old dress of her own into a new one for her little Hannah, Mrs. Riley mentioned the poor widow's trouble.

The narrator found a ready sympathizer in Rachel, who, in the kindness of her heart, said:

"It takes a good bit to set a girl up for service," and Mrs. Riley, to whom every penny was of consequence, shook her head thoughtfully as she spoke.

"Yes, I know it does; but a small stock would be better than none. A few things might do at first, and the girl could add what was necessary as she got her wages."

"But even so, it would be more than one person could afford to give."

"Yes, I'm afraid so," and as Mrs. Trimmer remembered her husband's narrow income and their many immediate wants, she felt it would not be just to themselves and their children to find the whole of the sum required for Mary's outfit, much as it would please them to do so, for John Trimmer was as kind as his wife.

But the idea of the girl losing a comfortable situation troubled the good woman very much; and after some cogitation—though she knew nothing personally of the Duncans, except that they were reported to be striving and honest—she devised a plan that could be accomplished by a little neighborly aid; and stepping in to Mrs. Riley's, she communicated her thoughts to her.

"We are willing to give a part, but we can't give all," she said; "you know the people in the street better than I do —those who could more readily spare a trifle than others, and if we can get enough to buy her a little calico and a print dress or two, I would soon put them together with my machine, and then her mother might be able to get her the other little things she will require."

Mrs. Riley gladly entered into the project, and promised to do what she could, and that same evening saw her making many calls in Hampton street. The poor, as is well known, are very kind to one another, and not one householder refused to contribute his or her mite toward the pleasing work of helping the Duncans—all would do what they could, and some even more than they really could spare, for the poor widow's sake.

Of course it was to be a secret; this was the most delightful part of the affair; Mrs. Duncan and the object of all this bounty, were not to know a word about it till the matter was complete, and then the joy and rest was filled up with pleasant surprises.

This bond of sympathy had a wonderful effect on the inhabitants of Hampton street, for there is nothing that so unites a people to one another as the healthy feeling, induced by all striving to do good in one common cause. It was well known who was the originator of the movement; and instead of Mrs. Trimmer now meeting with sneering looks and disagreeable words, every one suddenly regarded her with friendly interest, and many who had never cared to speak to the neat and becomingly-attired matron before would now stop her with a pleasant inquiry as to how she was getting on.

"Very well, thank you," was the general reply; "but if, when you have a few spare moments, you would like to come in and see, I shall be pleased to show you the things."

This invitation was in most cases accepted, and, in calling on such a tidy woman as Mrs. Trimmer was known to be, it was not surprising that her visitors tried to make themselves as presentable as possible.

Many a head of hair was more neatly arranged, and a brown bustle run together, in honor of this visit; and more than one woman in Hampton street had forgotten how really nice-looking she was, till she made those becoming alterations in her attire.

Attention to these little matters was but the stepping-stone to a more orderly way of life; and a peep into Number Thirteen sent some away with the longing desire of making their own little homes as pleasant as their neighbor's.

In the meanwhile, Mary's outfit was fast approaching completion; and the slight additions needful to things—which had accumulated far beyond Mrs. Trimmer's expectations—were to be given by another neighbor, Robert Kempton, who was a carpenter by trade, made a most acceptable contribution by presenting a good-sized, strong box in which to deposit the serviceable gifts.

And now nothing was wanting but what Mrs. Duncan might add herself; but at the last moment, just as the trunk was about to be packed, there came a gentle knock at Mrs. Trimmer's door, and, on its being opened, old Janet Rinne gave in a little parcel, and, just saying, "It is to go in the box with the rest," she bobbed away again.

No one knew the amount of self-denial that this neat little collar and ribbon, which she thought would be a pleasing addition to the young girl's wardrobe, had cost old Janet, for she was one of Hampton street's poorest tenants; but this deed of love afforded her much quiet happiness, and, in dwelling on the delight that her many little sacrifices would give another, she felt her reward.

But how should the box be given to Mrs. Duncan? This question had been debated with much interest; but, at last, it had been decided that, as Mrs. Trimmer and Mrs. Riley had done the greater part of the work, they should have the pleasure of presenting the welcome gift; and, on Mrs. Duncan's return from her day's labor, she and Mary should be told that they were wanted for a little while at Number Thirteen.

Quite an excitement prevailed in Hampton street that summer evening; some of it had been confided to the little widow's return, and, when at length she was seen entering the street, she was scarcely permitted to reach her own door before a neighbor, specially deputed for that purpose, stepped forward and delivered her message.

"My Mary go! with me! Why, what can Mrs. Trimmer want?"

And, congratulating herself on being tolerably neat and presentable, she and her daughter obeyed the summons.

"Come in, Mrs. Duncan, and sit down," and Mrs. Trimmer placed a chair for her visitor, while Mrs. Riley, with suppressed excitement, took her seat on the box.

"We have heard that you've been wanting to get Mary into service."

"Ah, indeed I do, and she might be going to a good place on Monday next, if I only had the clothes to send her in!"

"Well, there'll be no difficulty about that now, for here's a little surprise prepared for you," and signaling to her friend—who got up and pushed the box into the middle of the room—to open the lid, Mrs. Trimmer displayed the good little store within.

"This is a present to you, Mary, from all the neighbors," she added, smiling; and then as the mother and daughter, in surprise and gratitude, examined the useful articles before them, the speaker related by what means they had been collected; but seeing Mrs. Duncan was too overcome by a rush of grateful feeling—to say many words, she and Mrs. Riley devoted themselves to the young girl, who, with exclamations of pleasure, burst into his precious car, thrust it into his pocket and departed.—Ont Oute Derrick.

THAT SOCIAL.—The Ladies Aid Society Social held at the residence of A. Butters on Tuesday evening, was successful in all respects. It was a "housewarming" as well, Mr. Buttars having just moved into his new quarters. The walls were made to shake and the chandeliers to jingle with the merry turmoil of the young folks in every one of the many commodious rooms. That excellent Haines piano was brought into use, and made to do its part in the general joyousness. Oysters disappeared in marvelous quantities, and organ money rolled in just as marvelously. The society have $25 net profit as a result of this occasion, and the participants have pleasant recollections of the affair.

The Chicago Times says Grant is probably the only person whose candidacy would defeat the Republicans in 1880; and it is lucky for us this warning comes thus timely.

MARRIED.—A Chicago paper states that the schooner D. R. Owen still lies in the channel at Manistee where she sunk some time ago. She must be removed from the channel, as the danger of entering the harbor is increased. The contractors, a number of days before the accident, had sunk a crib under water, and were waiting for fine weather to put on the superstructure. The crib crushed into the lake some fifty feet beyond the pier light, unknown to the master of the Owen, and in entering the harbor during a gale struck this sunken crib and wrecked his vessel.

—The steamer Gazelle will lay up this week.

—The propellers Empire State and Fountain City both passed here Sunday on their way up, the former wending at Northport and the latter at Bower Harbor.

—Navigation will be virtually closed before another issue of our paper reaches its readers.

—The Clara Belle was to have left Traverse City for Charlevoix this (Tuesday) afternoon, on her last trip.

—The Menominee will be put upon the route her often Chicago and Mackinac again in the spring.

ANOTHER BURGLARY.—The fourth in the series of burglaries during the past summer and fall in Charlevoix, occurred on Tuesday night of last week at the Postoffice. About half past ten on that evening, W. G. Newman was passing the postoffice, when his attention was attracted by a noise in or about the building, which caused him to stop. He immediately heard a sound as of a window being raised or lowered, and soon the head and then the body of a person protruded itself from behind the building. The burglar discovering he was seen, immediately disappeared before Mr. Newman could collect his thoughts. He proceeded at once to the establishment of Sheriff McLeod, and informed Angus Cameron, who was there, of what he had seen, and the latter gentleman at once kindly notified the Postmaster, who repaired at once to the spot. He found about $5.00 of telegraph funds gone and an amount of small change from the money drawer of the postoffice. The telegraph funds were kept in a place where no person not well acquainted with the premises could have found them; in fact every feature of the operation indicates unmistakably, that the burglar was a resident of Charlevoix. Sheriff McLeod examined the premises immediately, and closely inspected the fresh tracks about the window.

About midsummer of the present year, the establishments of M. J. Stockman and Dr. Lewis were entered and the money drawers cleaned out—Mr. Stockman losing about $10.00, and Dr. Lewis a smaller sum. Later in the season the desk of the Steamer Gazelle was broken open in the absence of the crew and a sum of money taken. Now comes a fresh offence of the same nature, as if the burglar emboldened by his successes, had determined to make a business of his bold crime. The business men of Charlevoix, however, have had enough of this kind of business, and a funeral or an arrest will be heard of in these parts nearly simultaneous with the next burglary.

CROME & DORMAN.—The gentlemen constituting this firm came to Charlevoix in September last, since which time they have erected the fine large building on the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets, and to day they occupy it. The building is the finest on the street, is substantially built and neatly furnished in all of its apartments as far as completed. They have in their store now a line of fresh groceries and canned goods. In the spring they will complete some parts of the building now unnecessary to be used, and a first class bakery will be added to their business. Mr. Dorman is a practical baker, and will make his business a success. We bespeak for Crome & Dorman a liberal patronage.

The National Commercial Convention.

The following are the resolutions in full adopted by the National and International Convention recently held in Chicago:

Resolved, 1. That the continued prosperity of the agricultural, manufacturing, mining and commercial interests of the country cannot be secured without such a development of commerce with other countries as will afford a steady and growing market for our surplus products, and to secure this it is the duty of Congress to promote, by wise and liberal legislation, the opening and improvement of such lines of transportation by land and water as are of general and National importance.

2. That the duties upon freight and passengers on railroads for Union and Central Pacific business must be the only highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific a monopoly as burdensome as it is exclusive, and we will cease to agitate to take measures at the coming session to compel these companies to do which owes their existence to the liberality of the Nation, to fulfill their corporate obligations.

3. That the interests of the Government and the people alike demand the early completion of competing lines of railroad to the Pacific, and we therefore earnestly desire Congress to grant material aid to the Texas Pacific Railroad, and to extend the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

4. That direct trade with the countries lying south of us, which is destined in the immediate future to be the principal source of the commerce of the world, can best be developed by the establishment of a line of steamships, which, while it should be under the control of the most profitable to us, cannot be secured except by considerable pecuniary aid from the Government, and we therefore recommend the mail facilities which it is the province of the Government to furnish.

5. That the commissioners of navigation be requested to report to the next Congress the best means of securing the greater part of the domestic shipping of the Atlantic Coast to avoid the dangers of Cape Hatteras, and we commend the measure to the favorable consideration of Congress.

6. That a committee of one from each State represented in this Convention be appointed and charged with the duty of visiting Washington at a early day, presenting the resolutions of this Convention to the President and Congress of the United States.

A resolution was also adopted that the Chairman of the Convention (George W. Morris, of Kentucky,) be added to the committee to go to Washington to present the resolutions.

A Faithful Friend.

I HAVE lately seen an old horse at Bourn, in Lincolnshire, on the history of which I can thoroughly rely, and it is so remarkable that I think it worth publication. I have seen the horse myself, and as far as personal observation goes, I can thoroughly indorse the story. The horse is aged twenty-two, of the old short-legged coaching stamp, and has been in the possession of the present owner upward of sixteen years, during which period he has only had three days' rest, not excluding even Sundays. His work has been to run a heavy mail-cart from Bourn to Spalding, a distance of fourteen miles, inclosing the return journey, every day, and one day a week two miles extra to the horse leaves Bourn between six and seven in the morning, and reaches Bourn about seven in the evening. During his recreation at Swayfield, the horse is kept in further exercise by working at the plow and other work upon a farm. He is without blemish and in capital condition. His work for the last sixteen years has been so uniform that the horse knows the particular places he has to stop at on given days of the week; for instance, he persistently stops at the barber's shop on Tuesdays and Fridays, and six days a week he stops at a draper's shop for parcels, and on Sundays he won't stop at either place. His owner is so fond of him that a sort of feeling of Tom Moody, he hopes that he and his horse may be buried together.—Cor. London Field.

Castor oil, beside being an excellent dressing for leather, renders it vermin-proof. It should be mixed, say half and half, with tallow or other oil. Neither rats, roaches, nor other vermin will attack leather so prepared.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A Texas mother was frightened to death by two dogs fighting over her twin babies.

—Representative Alexander H. Stephens once made a large fortune as a lawyer and farmer, and lost it in the effort to maintain a newspaper.

—The latest New England mob disgraced Harwinton, Conn., by trying to lynch a German offender. He escaped, and the mob vented its wrath on his horse, which they sheared, tarred and feathered.

—A Portland, Conn., young woman was nearly shocked to death recently, while trying to swallow a chicken's heart whole. It lodged in her gullet, and the efforts of two doctors were necessary in relieving her.

—"Shoot! shoot!" was the response of W. A. Stegner, of Polk County, Tex., to his seventeen-year-old son when the latter seized a gun and ordered the old man to cease castigating his daughter. The boy "shot," and the old man was killed.

—At DesMoines, a kitten had caught and was playing with a mouse when the frightened captive sprang into pussy's open mouth and ran down her throat. The kitten went into spasms, which did not subside till the mouse had been suffocated.

—A well-known Newport, R. I., man, who is wealthy but close, recently counted the shingles on his house by bundles, with which he was to have his house covered, and because one bundle was short two shingles he took it back to the lumber-yard and demanded that the deficiency be made up.—Exchange.

—A St. Louis young man's chance of marrying an heiress to whom he was engaged, was spoiled by the use of his diary as evidence in a law-suit. The record showed he frequently called on other girls, that he had been rejected by two of them since his betrothal to her, and that he had borrowed money, to be repaid when he got hold of her purse.

—A well-known accountant made an ascent in a balloon, at Wabash, Ind., N. Y., the other day. When about 200 feet from the ground the air-ship veered off toward Seneca Lake, and when about two miles away from Watkins came down in the water. The balloon-let was rescued by a party who went to his assistance, after he had been in the water some twenty minutes.

—A few days since at Springfield, Ohio, a woman died from some mysterious disease located in the head. The symptoms had long been manifested, but no treatment seemed to have any permanent effect. After death there was an examination made, resulting in the unanimous decision that death was caused, primarily, by the use, for a long period, of chemical compounds for dyeing the hair.

—Mr. Bill Rudgson, of San Francisco, who was accidentally killed in that city a few days ago, was the author of "The Dance of Death," a book which attracted considerable attention both in this country and in England a year ago.

—The Rev. Allen Mclean, who is temporarily filling the Congregational pulpit at Litchfield, Conn., was married awhile ago, and because he did not ring some of his parishioners to the wedding they were displeased. He turned the tables on them by saying he thought a minister had as much right to choose his occasions as a business man, and he wished it understood that he did not bee the privilege of preaching in Litchfield, when there were so many thousands elsewhere hungering for the gospel.

—M. Monseigneur Asinari, a distinguished Roman Catholic prelate and at one time Papal Nuncio at Brussels, who recently died, the following anecdote is related: "On his way to Rome, after he had fulfilled his mission in Brussels, his carriage was stopped by brigands, and after they had pretty thoroughly rifled the persons of the prelate and his attendants, the chief asked him if he had anything more. 'Joseph,' said the Bishop, turning to his servant, 'did you give him the money that you had hidden?' alluding to a fifty-franc piece which had been concealed in the bottom of a soup-dish, amid a lot of soiled linen. The worthy man delivered it a crime to tie even to a brigand."

—A correspondent of the Albany Journal relates the following incident of one of Henry Clay's visits to that State: "Mr. Clay went to Kinderhook to visit Mr. Van Buren. The town was filled with people from the surrounding country, and at every stage they were presented to Mr. Clay by Mr. Van Schaick, a prominent lawyer of the county. Among those who came to be introduced to Mr. Clay was a very beautiful young lady. It happened that just at the moment of presentation her name awkwardly escaped Mr. Van Schaick's memory. His hesitation embarrassed the lady. Mr. Clay, perceiving this, came instantly to her rescue by saying in his chivalrous way: 'Oh, the name is no sort of consequence, I assure you; the young lady's looks, she will very soon change it.'"

Borrowed Splendor.

A Paris correspondent, writing of the parvenues that infest the gay metropolis, says: They have also done much injury, because most families imitate their luxuries without having the means to do so. There are many houses in Paris where the evening entertainments are very brilliant, but this is a borrowed splendor. The pictures which attract your eye are hired of the picture dealer, the gilt chairs and settees of the furniture dealer, the diamonds and pearls which the lady of the house wears, are borrowed from the jewelers, and Pardly has the last guest left the house when these costly articles must be returned to the owners. Even the fruits, the pineapples and pears, which stand on the table in silver vases are like the wax fruits on occasion. You rarely see a supper at which carp is placed upon such tables, and after having excited the admiration of the guests a few minutes it is removed. The guests are then served with little pieces of diminutive carp; the finest magnificent fish, "like the baseless fabric of a vision," have vanished into thin air. It was also hired, and after playing its short part, it has returned to the dealer in delicacies. A fish cannot, of course, delight the eye very long without offending the olfactories, but there are ways in Paris fruits of a rare beauty, which during the winter season appear on the tables of our luxurious houses, and it may happen that a guest who has seen a pear on a table in the Rue de Richelieu during the month of January will greet the same pear with recognizance in Feornary on a table in some other quarter of the city. It is the old story of trying to throw dust in the eyes of the world in order to attract influential guests to the house, to marry the daughters, and to provide the sons with Government positions. This does not always work, but there are some who succeed, and the prize is well worth the trouble. But those who are unsuccessful end by ruining themselves, and when it is too late they see that Fortune runs after her favorites, but is seldom attained by those who pursue her.

When banks become unsteady even the depositor is likely to lose his balance.—Chicago Times.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Pierre Soule, grandson of the famous Louisiana Senator, died recently in New Orleans at the age of nineteen years. The family name is now extinguished.

—The wife of Jefferson Davis has been very dangerously ill. She was convalescing when the news of the death of her only remaining son by yellow fever caused a relapse which almost resulted in her death.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and ACUE

CHILLS and FEVER.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of a short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to effect the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and while families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case save certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

Directions, respectfully recommended.

J. S. PATRICK.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL being the only party manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the labels on each bottle. If the private stamp is not on each bottle, do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

VEGETINE.

I advise All who are suffering as I have suffered to give VEGETINE a trial.

BOSTON, Sept. 9, 1877.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

DEAR SIR—I have suffered with Scrofula for seven years and could get no relief. I have tried every thing in the shape of medicine, and have been confined the most part to the house. I was induced to use VEGETINE, and after using three bottles I was able to go to my business, and have been working at it ever since. I have taken in all nine bottles. After taking the second bottle I commenced to feel well, and after taking the third bottle I was entirely free from the disease. I had a running sore on my right leg that had run so for three years, and two large sores on my neck, which are entirely healed. I had taken fourteen bottles of Vegetine. By the use of VEGETINE I was restored to health, and I feel it my duty to say that I have not had a sick day since. I am satisfied that VEGETINE is the best blood purifier in the world. I am willing to answer any inquiries in regard to my case.

HENRY T. SMITH, No. 50 Clive St., Boston, Mass.

SCRUTTON'S MEMORIES.—The Vegetine has proved many cures—there is said, in fact, to be a specific for everything, where the patient has had many physicians, but still many of the former cases are cured after Vegetine has failed.—Boston Evening Traveller.

VEGETINE

I CAN RECOMMEND.

DR. H. R. STEVENS: SOMERVILLE, June 10, 1875.

DEAR SIR—It is with great pleasure I can recommend to the highest terms your valuable medicine, VEGETINE. I have been troubled with Dyspepsia for the space of nine years and could get no relief. I have tried every thing in the shape of medicine, but found nothing that did me any good. I was from my knees to my feet, and was not able to do my work. I was induced by my wife to try VEGETINE, and have taken three bottles. After taking the second bottle I commenced to feel well, and after taking the third bottle I was entirely free from the disease. I had a suffering condition for will avail myself of every opportunity to speak a word in favor of VEGETINE.

WM. STINEBLEIN, Station Agent, Somerville, Mass.

VEGETINE

Completely Cured Me.

NEWPORT, KY., Feb. 26, 1877.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

DEAR SIR—I write to say that seven bottles of your Vegetine have completely cured me from a very severe case of Scrofula, of many years' standing, after trying the best physicians and spending a great deal. It has now been over two years since I used the last bottle, and I have had no return of the disease, and consider myself entirely cured.

Yours truly, J. A. PATRICK.

"VEGETINE," says a Boston physician, "has no equal as a blood purifier. Dozens of the worst cases fail cures, after all other remedies had failed. I visited the laboratory and certificated myself of its genuine merit. It is prepared from barks, roots and herbs, each of which has a medicinal virtue, and is compounded in such a manner as to produce astonishing results."

THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH.
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, NOV. 26, 1878

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIN LETTER.

New York, Nov. 20, 1878.

EDIT H SENTINEL.

It was a mad a year since Owen Murphy, one of our Excise Commissioners, quietly pocketed some $50,000 or money paid in for licenses by liquor sellers and left for parts unknown. It is needless to say that neither man nor money was ever found, and the occurrence would have been forgotten by this time but for a suit just begun by about 1,000 of the victimized saloonists to get back what they out of their money from the city, which, however, refuses to hold itself responsible for their loss. So much for the Excise Department. Now comes forward the Dark Department, and to show that it is not out of the fashion, points with pride to its pet cashier and bookkeeper who is just discovered to be an embezzler of $15,000 As this person, however, was not wise enough to take ten times that amount and get away a safe distance from which to negotiate with the officials for a return of part of the the money on condition of his own immunity from prosecution, he is to be severely dealt with.

The discovery of this embezzlement, bungling as it was is however quite a relief to us, for we hadn't had a real square defalcation before in several months. To be sure there were the Manhattan Bank and Stewart grave robberies to assure us that the millennium was not close at hand, but New York has, through long habit, become so addicted to defalcation that nothing else can serve as a full substitute, and she becomes very uneasy if she can't have one about once in so often.

Speaking of the Manhattan and Stewart affairs, reminds me to say that in the former of these matters, which it will be remembered, was the carrying off $3,000,000 from a bank in 6 minutes flight, very little seems to be doing, the officers of the institution showing a remarkable apathy on the subject. In both these these cases, as indeed in all similar cases, the newspapers seem to be straining every nerve to aid the criminals. They pry around the various scenes of action, worm out every secret, lay hold of every obtainable scrap of information as to the plans and movements of the police, and then publish promptly every particular so that the rascals involved may be fully warned of every step that is being taken toward their arrest, and act accordingly.

In the Stewart matter success is pretty certain to crown the efforts of Judge Hilton and the police, in spite of the papers. the announcement being authoritatively made that of grave robbers have been "spotted" and the whereabouts of the body discovered. If this be true the arrest will doubtless be made before this reaches your readers One curious thing connected with this affair is the widespread, morbid interest which it has excited, as evinced by the enormous volume of letters which have poured in on Judge Hilton and Mrs Stewart ever since the robbery was made known. a great number of these communications coming from widely scattered points, all purport to be confessions of the crime and state that the writers either have the body or know just where it is. A still larger number are from clairvoyants, dreamers and spiritual mediums, each of which is sure that he or she has had a special vision revealing the position of the object of search. One of these says the body is buried in one corner of the graveyard in which the tomb is located; another says it is in a sub-cellar on Eleventh avenue; another says the hiding place is over on Long Island, and still another that the remains were placed in a box and sunk in the North River. A still different class of epistles are from anonymous writers who assert at the $75,000 reward offered and say that if it is not raised to some higher figure (usually from $100,000 to $1,000,000,) the body will never be found. One letter from down South some where, warns Judge Hilton that a plan is on foot to kidnap him and extort ten millions of dollars as his ransom. Truly this is a great country in which we live!

In view of the well recognized fact that a striking and novel crime always arouses an epidemic of similar outrages, it would be well for those everywhere who have charge of cemeteries to exercise special vigilance for the next few months. Already dispatches from the West that the Stewart desecration is beginning to have its effect.

But I turn from the catalogue of misdoings to less depressing subjects. Amid all the excitement and labour incident to the search for the body of the founder, the great commercial machine known as A. T. Stewart & Co. continues its uninterrupted workings. The firm are just now executing an important and long contemplated movement, the abandonment of their dowtown building, on City Hall Square, where for years their wholesale trade has been transacted, and the consolidation of their whole business in the immense structure at Broadway and Tenth street, until now occupied for their retail department only.

This uptown tendency of our most important business houses is simply irresistable. Take Union Square for instance, which within the memory of thousands of New Yorkers was quite out of town, and which no one in these days dreamed could ever become more than a fashionable residence locality. Years ago the business wave began to encroach upon it, and now every trace of its residence character has disappeared, the last of the fine old brown stone mansions going down more than a year ago, to make way for the Mechanics and Traders Company's elegant building on the south side of the Square. Some of the Knickerbocker families, thus driven of their beautiful retreat, but their protests are a good deal like Dame Partington's attempt to sweep back the Atlantic with a broom

This street opposite of the Meriden Company I have no doubt many of your readers have wondered at and admiringly visited. Located just where the tides of Metropolitan high life pour their confluent streams from lower Broadway and fourteenth street into the Square, it is an object as prominent as it is ornamental. Within, the warerooms are simply magnificent. No signs here of the workshop confusion which attends the production of the glittering ware at the great factory up at Meriden, where over a thousand operatives are kept busy fashioning its myriad beautiful forms. Everything is quiet and sumptuous, in keeping with the rich goods which line the long vista of show cases, set off by velvet and plate glass, and which are acknowledged to be the finest made in the world. The fine white metal invented by this Company and used as the base of all their goods and which is constantly but unsuccessfully sought to be imitated by other makers, both European and American, makes their the practical equivalent of solid silver, and as a consequence their manufactures from more than one half the total silverware productions of this country. RADIX.

The President and the Party.

The interview with the President, which appeared lately in Washington newspapers, and was telegraphed extensively over the country, is regarded as very significant as indicating an abandonment of what has been known as "the Southern policy," and a confession of its failure. It is assumed that a change in the temperament of the administration has taken place, and that the future relations existing between the President and his party will be different from those of the past; and that hereafter the differences in the Republican ranks will be entirely healed, as the President will enjoy the intimate confidence of the leaders of his party from this time on.

A friend of ex-Secretary Chandler says that he asked him what he came to Washington for, and the ex Secretary replied: "I come to stiffen the President's backbone, and, if he has any stiff in him, now is the time he'll show it." This no doubt expresses the meaning of the conference of Mr. Chandler and Mr. Hayes which lasted the whole of Monday evening

Another friend of Secretary Chandler expressed the same thing in a different way. He is a man in high position, and would be admitted to confidence as much as any one. He says "Yes, it is true that Mr. Chandler came here to appeal, if necessary, to the President. But he found him more in harmony with his views than he expected. You will remember now that I predict that there will in the future be perfect harmony between the President and the 'stalwart' men of the party. You need not be surprised to see Senator Conkling at the White House before he comes to Washington. The President is clear with matters."

Immediately following the visit of the radical Republicans to the White House appeared an extended interview with one Republican newspaper in Washington, in which the President is represented to have confessed the failure of his experiment to conciliate the South, and to have expressed his intention to change his mode of dealing with the people of that section. The President is represented as saying: "No one will deny that the attempt to enforce the policy was not earnestly made, for that it was carried out with a concession more than to accomplish the result for which it was inaugurated. Of the personal and partisan sacrifice I have made in this effort, and of the consequent interruption of certain relations that had previously existed between myself and some of my supporters, I have nothing to say just now, but it appears that the leaders who made these pledges did not exert their utmost to keep them, or were unable to do so. In fact I am constantly forced to admit that the experiment was a failure. The first election held after it was attempted has proved that fair elections, with free suffrage for every voter in the South, are an impossible under the existing condition of things.

In regard to his intentions for the future, the President is represented as speaking with reference to The interview says that [illegible] precedings have been withdrawn, not only against those who have already been arrested but against others. It is proposed to make a clean sweep of the business, and exhaust every avenue in the execution of justice. The integrity of American citizenship has been greatly violated, and it must and shall be vindicated."

The President is not to depended upon so far as election frauds and political intimidation in the South are concerned, to aid in such a way as will meet the approval of even so radical a Republican as ex Secretary Chandler. Those who have been guilty of violations of law will be punished, so far as it is possible for the President to bring about punishment, and the most vigorous methods have already been adopted to secure this result. Special officers, in whose line of duty this will come, are already in Washington, and have received instructs as from the President in person.

It can be said that there will probably be no reason why the radical element of the Republican party cannot act in perfect harmony with the President hereafter. The reason why there has been a lack of harmony have been or will be removed before Congress meets, and are not likely to exist again. No more Democrats will be appointed to office, and the President need not be expected to experiment any further with "conciliation."

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American [illegible] of dyspepsia, or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a curse. A dread of a [illegible] existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, as you will only throw aside prejudice and scepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Crowell, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many Physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, if you are distressed for that derange Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of Lung Diseases. If in the third are yet thousands of people who are predisposed to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Coughs settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say the [illegible] days will sold last your without one. Consumptives try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by your Druggist, Geo. W. Crowell.

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

THREE brothers, named James, David and John Tanor, owned and operated a farm near Chenango, N. Y. James and David disagreed a few days ago, but it should be run. A few days ago, David killed James with a pitchfork and then went into an adjoining wood and blew out his brains with a shotgun.

GEORGE FESSLER, the defaulting Treasurer of Stark County, Ohio, pleaded guilty to the charge of embezzlement, on the 11th, and was sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary, and to pay a fine of $60,000.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 12th says Secty Sherman, referring to the recent withdrawal of one and two-dollar United States notes, had stated that the story was started years ago, and caused an unnatural demand for small bills. The story was unfounded, and no order had been given the Printing Bureau to limit the issue of ones and twos. They were issued to everybody who demanded them, and no order had ever been made for their withdrawal. After the first of January next, no bills of less denomination than five dollars can be issued by National Banks, and if the one and two-dollar United States notes were withdrawn it would make place for more silver, but the Secretary thinks, the public at large ought to have opportion to take gold, silver or paper of any denomination, colored or printed, and that this is the best way to secure the largest circulation.

IT was stated, in Washington, on the 12th, that Lord Salisbury, in his reply to Secty Evarts, was as earnest in his position that the Canadian Fishery Award was made in accordance with the Treaty of Washington as Evarts was in maintaining the opposite view. The correspondence was not likely to be concluded before the award would become due, on the 22d, and it would probably be paid under protest.

A MEETING of the New York Clearing House, at which thirty city banks participated, was held in that city, on the 15th, to take action on the coin question in view of the resumption of specie payments on the 1st of January next. The following rule of action was decided on, to take effect Jan. 1, 1879: Gold coin to be treated as lawful money and not to be received on special deposit; special exchange of gold checks at the Clearing House to be established; balances to be paid in gold or legal tenders; silver dollars received on deposit only when payment can be made in kind; silver certificates not available for the payment of balances, and dollars only as subsidiary coins in small amounts, say under $10; special gold accounts to be discontinued.

SECY SHERMAN, on the 13th, issued a circular to the effect that any person subscribing thereafter for 4-per-cent. bonds might pay for them with any of the 5-20 bonds of the act of March 3, 1865, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after the 1st of July, 1870, in the same way as if they were called at the date of subscription in regular course; that the subscription must be accompanied with a full description of such bonds, which bonds must be forwarded to the Treasurer within thirty days thereafter, or, to be applied like called bonds. Of such bonds there was outstanding, on the 15th, the amount of one cent.

A two days' session of the National and International Commercial Convention was held recently in Chicago. A large number of distinguished men from all sections of the Union were present as delegates. The Hon. George W. Morris, of Kentucky, was chosen Permanent Chairman. A series of resolutions was adopted, after lengthy discussion, declaring in favor of a grant by Congress of material aid to the Texas Pacific Railroad, and an extension of the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific; immediate revision by Congress for ocean mail service between the chief ports of the United States and all important commercial points on the coast of South America, that a suitable and navigable cheap water line should be opened up between the waters of Virginia and North Carolina; that a committee be appointed to visit Washington and present the resolutions to Congress.

JUDGE MCALLISTER, formerly Judge of the Illinois Supreme Court, recently decided, at Chicago, that an indebtedness based upon "option" deals and evidenced by notes of bank-checks, commonly known as "margins," is negotiable and held by innocent third parties. The taint attaching to the original transaction remains upon the paper forever. It is by law made worthless and void.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made, on the 14th, that the United States Government had, through a banking-house in New York, completed the purchase of sterling exchange to the amount of about £1,100,000, to meet the £5,500,000 required by the Halifax award to be paid to the British Government at London, on the 25th, and that agents of the United States Treasury Department would make the transfer at London on that date.

DURING the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, the American Consulates abroad collected fees aggregating $636,914.11. That is an excess of $110,340.20 over the salaries paid—making the Consular Service self-supporting.

IN New York, on the 14th, the United States Board of Trade adopted resolutions recommending to Congress the most liberal legislation upon the subject of the Postal Service consistent with the rapid transmission and quick delivery of all proper mailable matter, and heartily approving the steps agreed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury and the New York bankers for the National resumption of specie payments. Chauncey I. Filley, of St. Louis, was re-elected President of the Board, and B. B. Covington, of Cincinnati, Vice-President.

A NUMBER of the clerks on the countersunk rolls of the Patent Office, in Washington, were discharged, on the 14th, for lack of funds. Half of them were women.

TWO PROMINENT parties were arrested at Zanesville, Ohio, on the 14th, upon the charge of wholesale body-snatching. In the wagon driven by the accused four recently-interred dead bodies were found.

A CABOOSE on the New Brunswick Railroad jumped the track at Florenceville, N. B., on the night of the 14th, and slid down a high embankment. Arrived at the bottom, it caught fire and was totally destroyed. One man was killed, one boy burned to death and about fifteen persons more or less seriously injured.

A NEW YORK dispatch of the 15th says one of the chief operators concerned in the Manhattan Savings Bank robbery was in custody, and that other arrests would soon be made.

ACCORDING to the official returns made to the Bureau of Statistics, the number of foreigners arriving at the Port of New York during October last was 13,597, against 8,628 during the same month last year. During the nine months ending Sept. 30 last, there were 54,963 arrivals. During the same time last year, the number was 62,522.

THE New Haven (Conn.) Board of Education have decided—7 to 1—to keep the old uniform plan of religious exercises in the public schools of that city. One of the two Catholic members voted with the majority.

IT was reported from Charlestown, W. Va., on the 15th, that 900 indictments had been found against illicit distillers and other violators of the Revenue laws in that section.

UP to the night of the 17th, the returns concerning the death of the late A. T. Stewart's body were numerous and contradictory. At that time a special dispatch stated that the body was in Judge Hilton's possession, and the thieves under arrest. The Associated Press report was in substance that the authorities had obtained no clue to its whereabouts.

MICHAEL ROSSITER, a New York husband, threw a lighted lamp at his wife, on the evening of the 17th. The lamp broke, the oil exploded and the poor woman was burned to death.

A LOCOMOTIVE boiler exploded at the Philadelphia & Reading Depot, in Mahoney City, Pa., on the afternoon of the 18th, instantly killing an engineer, a conductor and a boy, and fatally injuring another boy. Eight or ten other persons were badly injured.

MISS MAY MARSHALL, a female pedestrian, recently walked, at Buffalo, N Y., 300 miles in sixty hours. Her fastest mile was made in eight minutes. She was walking against time, and had twelve minutes to spare.

A CUTTING-UNDER in passenger rates by Eastern-bound roads resulted in such a reduction in fares that tickets were selling in Cincinnati, a few days ago, at the unprecedently low rates of one dollar for Philadelphia and New York; Pittsburg, $2.75, and at merely nominal rates for some common points in Ohio.

ON the night of the 18th, a severe earthquake shock was felt in the Cities of Memphis, Tenn., and St. Louis, Mo. In both cities the oscillating movement of the earth was plainly felt. No damage was done.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

AN interchange of opinion took place among the members of the Cabinet, in Washington, on the 12th, concerning the alleged violations of the Election laws, especially in Louisiana, during the recent elections, the United States Attorney for that State having complained of cases showing personal violence, intimidation, etc. The sentiment of the Cabinet was that all such alleged violations should be inquired into, with a view to the punishment of the offenders.

AT the recent election in New Hampshire the vote for Governor was as follows: Head (Rep.), 38,085; McKean (Dem.), 31,083; Brown (Greenback), 6,895; Prohibition and scattering, 120. Head over all, 488.

ON the 12th, Judge Witherspoon, of the Cauvassing Board of Madison County, Fla., was arrested by a Deputy United States Marshal, and held in $9,000 bail, on a charge of receiving and destroying one of the precinct returns which gave Bisbee (Rep. for Congressman) fifty-seven majority. A colored inspector in the same county had been committed to Jail charged with not doing his duty. The Canvassing Board of Alachua County were also arrested, on the same day, by a Deputy United States Marshal. It is said they had thrown out three precincts, one because the name of a voter was wrong on one of the tickets, and two, because the duplicate precinct returns did not agree. Should this action of the Board be sustained, Bisbee's majority in that county would be reduced from 300 to 97, and he would be defeated.

A CHARLESTON (S. C.) dispatch of the 12th says three managers of elections at one of the polls there had been arrested under warrants from the United States Commissioner, for obstructing a Deputy Marshal at the recent election, and refusing to publicly count the ballots. They gave bail. Eighteen citizens of Orangeburg had also been arrested and put under bail for obstructing United States Marshals in the discharge of their duties at the election.

THE workingmen of Boston have nominated a full ticket for municipal offices, headed by Davis J. King, butter, for Mayor. Mayor Prince has been renominated by the Butter faction for the Mayoralty.

TWO MORE persons were arrested at Charleston, S. C., on the 12th, who are charged with offenses against United States laws at the recent election. William L. Daggett, a prominent Democrat, who was charged specially with ballot-box stuffing, in a letter of ex-Congressman Mackey, published in Northern newspapers, had begun proceedings against Mackey for libel.

COL. THOMAS B. KROGH, of North Carolina, who was in Washington on the 13th, stated that the Republicans would not have a single Representative in Congress from his State, as Martin and O'Hara would be counted out by the local Returning Boards, and Russell, elected as a Greenback Republican, did not intend to act or vote with the Republicans.

THE returns from the Pennsylvania election show that Hoyt, Rep., for Governor, received 312,567 votes; Bell, Dem., 307,092; Mason, Nat., 81,678; Lane, Prohibition, 8,660. Total vote, 709,998. Hoyt's plurality, 23,567.

A NEW YORK telegram of the 14th says the Greenback-Labor organs claim that their party had cast this year 477,000 votes, as against 187,000 last year and 69,000 in 1876.

PROF. EDISON was reported to be suffering from ill-health, on the 14th. He had given up his experiments with the electric light and his efforts to discover some means of deadening the sound connected with the operation of the Metropolitan Elevated Railway in New York City, because of the unfavorable condition of his health.

ON the 14th, returns from all the counties in Minnesota were published, showing a Republican majority of 17,824.

THE Hewitt Congressional Labor Committee met at Scranton, Pa., on the 14th. Five witnesses were examined, who traversed the entire range of grievances which the mining and laboring classes are suffering under. Hickey, a prominent Labor Reformer, attributed the hard times to several causes—high taxes, bonds, freight discrimination, coal combination and over-population; he would have Congress take up the matter of railroads; they should be compelled to relinquish their mining business. After more testimony of a similar character, the committee adjourned sine die.

RETURNS (mostly official), published in the New York Tribune of the 17th, give the vote in that State at the recent election as follows: Republican, 339,678; Democratic, 252,006; Greenback, 71,030; Prohibition, 8,338. Total vote this year, 37,052 larger than that of last year.

A BREAKFAST from Wilmington, N. C., on the 17th, says it seemed settled, beyond doubt, that Martin (Rep.) was elected to Congress from the First District, in that State, by forty to fifty majority.

ON the 16th, the Supreme Court of Florida granted an alternative mandamus against the Canvassing Board of Alachua County, returnable on the 20th, in response to a petition asking that the Board be compelled to make a canvass of all the returns of the county, three precincts having been thrown out. Bisbee claimed that if the votes of Alachua County were all counted, he would have 300 majority, without the votes of Precinct No. 4 in Madison County, which had not been returned by the Inspectors.

A RECENT official proclamation in South Carolina announces that Wade Hampton, being incapacitated by recent injuries from discharging the duties of Executive, had transferred the office of Governor to Lieut.-Gov. Simpson, who is now styled Acting-Governor.

YELLOW-FEVER NEWS.

A JACKSON (Miss.) dispatch of the 14th says no new cases and no deaths from yellow fever had occurred there within forty-eight hours. The Howard Association announced that they had ample means to meet all claims upon them, and that no more contributions for that locality were needed.

THE members of the National Yellow-Fever Commission left Memphis, on the night of the 15th, for Richmond, Va. In their forthcoming report, they will advocate a system of National quarantine, under the direction of the United States Government. The Commissioners are convinced, from their investigation, that the fever at New Orleans was caused by importation, and was carried from there to every other point. Under favorable circumstances, the disease might prevail in any part of the United States. From the experience of the past, the Commission are of the opinion that the only practical means to keep yellow fever from this country is a National quarantine.

THERE were seven deaths from yellow fever reported in New Orleans during the twenty-four hours ending at six p. m., on the 15th. Most of them were cases of relapse, some after one or two months' recovery. Five of them were children. Total deaths to date, 4,008.

THERE were two new cases at Vicksburg, on the 12th, and three at Delta, La.

THE total number of deaths from yellow fever at the South, up to the 15th, was reported at nearly 4,000.

IN an order, issued on the 17th, the Health Officer of Vicksburg announced that it was then considered safe for absentees to return to that city, provided their houses had been thoroughly ventilated and fumigated.

THERE were two yellow-fever deaths at New Orleans, on the 16th. A child died of the fever at Chattanooga, Tenn., on the night of the 18th, and the mother was sick with the same disease; they were recently refunded refugees, having fled to Alabama at the outbreak of the plague.

THERE were ten yellow-fever deaths in New Orleans during the forty-eight hours ending at 6 p. m., on the 18th. Ne new cases reported, on the 18th.

DURING the recent prevalence of the epidemic at Memphis, the Appeal lost a bookkeeper, eight compositors and six men from the press-room, while sixteen members of the families of its workmen died. The Avalanche lost its business manager, two editors, five compositors, two pressmen, a porter and two carriers, and the Ledger four compositors.

RECENT advices from South America state that an earthquake in New Granada, on October last, did considerable damage to property, and several lives are reported lost. The destruction in the southern portion of the Republic of Ecuador was complete, and the loss of life and property was very great. The Volcanoes of Isaico and Santa Anna were in a state of furious ebullition, and the inhabitants in the neighborhood were terribly alarmed, and many had fled to places of safety.

—Some two years ago the Rev. J. T. Baird, publishing agent of the Publication Board of the Presbyterian Church in the South, was tried before the Presbytery for embezzlement, and deposed from the ministry. But on a rehearing of the case, the examiners of the Publication Society's books testified to gross blunders into error in the examinations, and that instead of a deficiency of more than $8,000, there was only a debit balance against Dr. Baird of $188. They also find that Dr. Baird has been irregular in his business methods, but not a defaulter; and they judge him not to merit deposition from the ministry. The Louisville Christian Observer says that "when a balance-sheet is struck it may be found not only that he is not in debt to the Publication Comulttee, but that it is in his debt."

AMERICAN DISPLAY AT THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

Wonders of the Mechanical Department.

[From the London Times, Aug. 23.]

* * * Perhaps, however, the most important display in this department, all things considered, is that of the Waltham Watch Company, their first in the European exhibitions. The readers of the Times reports of the Philadelphia Exhibition will not need to be informed of the admirable machinery by which the works of the Waltham watches are produced, or their singular exactitude, which enables any part of a watch to be replaced by the corresponding piece of any other watch of the same grade. In this mechanical production of watches, America has long led the world, and the mechanism by which the English army rifle is still produced is with much advantage a contribution from the American armories. But in the Waltham works science has been brought to the aid of native ingenuity to such a degree that one hardly knows which to admire most, the fabrication of watches has gone through a large arc of another revolution. What was begun by applying such machines that their work was beyond competition on anything but the largest scale by hand-work is continued by the construction of the most essential parts of a watch on a scale so gigantic as practically to supersede hand-work altogether. The result is that the watch is now produced. Every one knows that the great difficulty in making chronometers has been the compensation for expansion and contraction due to change of temperature; but what is not well known is that this difficulty is due less to the balance, which, by its construction of two metals (generally brass and steel), may be perfectly corrected, than to the spring of the balance, or hair-spring, which, being immensely longer, becomes five times the error caused by the expansion and contraction of the balance-wheel. The two pieces must be considered as one, and the compensation effected in the steel or rim must answer for the spring as well as for itself. The theoretical and insuperable difficulty in this compensation has always been that the error caused by the expansion and contraction of the spring was in a different ratio from that of the correcting expansion or contraction of the rim, and that the quantities may be compared to curves with two radii, which could not be kept together at two points, but not to coincide throughout, so that if the compensation at the extremes of temperature is correct, the mean must be in error by nearly the same.

The old compensation was, speaking broadly, to treating a band of brass on one of steel, to prevent both uncertainly and mechanically erroneous, since the contraction and expansion can only go on with a certain tendency to disrupture of the elements and consequent inequality of the balance. The new practice proceeds on an entirely different arrangement of the compensating metals. The rim, of plain steel, is cut away through at the fitted extremities of the semi-circles by several saw-blade like notches, the number determined by experiment, and the brass is forced into these notches. The ends of the resulting weights are then put on at the other extremities of the arcs, and adjusted to being distributed along them empirically, and it is found possible in this arrangement so to distribute the compensating brass in varying weights as to give at will a compensation for the mean temperature, either in excess of, or less than the extremes, and of course, to give a compensation for intermediate degrees, throughout, which makes it theoretically possible to have perfect compensation for all temperatures at once. It is doubtful to make this clear, without diagrams showing the exact curves attained by experiment; but the nature of the result will be appreciated by those who know the mechanism of the balance. It is simply the elimination of all error from the compensated balance so far as compensation is concerned. Practically and mechanically there will always be some, due to the imperfection of human workmanship; but it is believed that the remedy and equally the manual adjustment required will be reduced to one-third of that actually obtaining under the old form of balance. But to illustrate how far-reaching the various improvements in mechanism it may be noted that the delicacy of construction in the new balance would only have been possible with the an absolute interchangeability of parts, the perfection of which may be judged from that of the micrometer last produced and shown at Paris, by which measures the hundredth-quarterly part of an inch, and even indicates that so large a part that might be divided under a rega readily into hundred thousandths. A sufficiently large gauge detects inequalities in the thread of a screw up to hundred thousandths, and a screw made for the Government Screw Commission to correct the measures has been constructed in which the mechanical error in the thread is less than one ten-thousandth part of an inch.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

WILLIE.

He eyes were brown, his cheeks were bright,
His bathing hair swept from his curls,
I used to think his teeth were pearls
I weighed him with such great delight,
My little sweetheart, Willie.

Across the school-room's din and noise
He sent me friendly smiles and looks;
He loved to carry home my books
And guard me from the rougher boys,
My kind, brave-hearted Willie.

He gave me once—I have it yet
Pressed in my dictionary leaves,
The first, sad pallid pansy round it weaves—
An early April violet,
My thoughtful, gentle Willie.

One noon I crossed the shaded lane
Where Willie used to wait for me;
He was not there, and wonderingly
I waited long, but long in vain,
For my dear playmate, Willie.

That day, how dull the lessons seemed!
I watched the clock's slow, measured beat,
While o'er his empty desk and seat
The smiling sun sent sunlight streamed:
I missed my boy, my Willie.

And so the long, long week went by
To Sunday one more sun dyed a west,
The saddest ever said or heard;
I could not ask, I could not stir,
My heart seemed dead with Willie.

I saw him once again. The place
Was dark and hushed. He lay at rest
With white flowers smiling on his breast.
I shrieked and fell in my despair—Jesus dead Face.
And said good-bye to Willie.

Ah me! ah me! How many years
Have passed and gone? Two boys frot
And fill my heart; but even yet
My eyes have tears for those days
Whenever I think of Willie.

A SCALE-Y STORY.

"A Major" loved a maiden so,
His swelling heart was soft as "Do."

He oft would hasten to her and say,
"You are, of light, my only "Me."

"Ah! but kinder you would be,
And sometimes severely smile on "Me."

"You are my "Fa," my gentle star,
I love (one day) "Sol" far.

"My passion I cannot control,
You are the object of my "Soul."

The maiden said, "Fie! such cuss,
How can you go on thus? Oh, "La!"

The Major rose from bended knee,
And went on his "Mi" manner free.

The father thought no match was fine
This "Major" one had been "a minor."

They married soon, and after that
Dwelt in ten rooms all on "one flat."

So happy ends the little tale,
For they live on the greatest scale.

A TALE OF TWO THANKSGIVINGS.

It was Thanksgiving-Eve. The dusk was falling fast, and something else beside the dusk, namely, a fine cold sleet, which coated the sidewalks with a slippery crust, and made the feet of each wayfarer with little stinging slaps, as who should say, "Take those, with Winter's compliments; he is just behind, and sends his card on ahead." Thanksgiving-Eves not infrequently are of this uncomfortable pattern. It may be Nature's happy device for enhancing, by contrast, the cheer and comfort of the season, making the Brodie-and-cozy-corner time more tempting and savory. But how about those who have no firesides or dinners?

Jenny Forde belongs only in part to this destitute class. She had a dinner, so far as a stove with an open grate about eight inches across deserves to rank under that name. Jenny was proud of her stove. She was quite sure that no one not an expert would suspect its useful peculiarity, or detect the handy little oven hidden away behind, among the ornamental twirl and scrolls, or the warming place for potatoes and pudding-dishes beneath the hot plate on top. To-night she had popped on an extra lump of coal, in honor of the season, and the little room fairly glowed with warmth and that redolence of scrubbed blacking which is the property of little stoves all the world over. The shade was pulled down over the window, the lamp set unlit upon the table, and Jenny, in her Connecticut rocking-chair, was seated for the unwonted luxury of an idle half-hour. Easier she must now. This lazy interval was a holiday treat, the only one within her means, poor girl. There was no one to tempt to the extravagance of a Thanksgiving feast or to share it, and to spend time and money in feasting herself alone was an idea which would never have entered into her frugal and modest head.

Yet it was not an unhappy face which the fire-glow caressed as the big rocker swung to and fro with a rhythmic movement marked by a soft thud, thud, on the carpeted floor. Jenny's characteristic was a round softness of form and feature, which would make her look girlish up to the end of her life. Her shrewd blue eyes beamed with a kindly gleam; her mouth, though its corners showed care-worn lines, trembled easily into a smile. There was a pleasant attraction in the plump little figure, always so trimly clad and neat, in the childish fingers, with their deep needle-pricks. Every body felt it, from babies who cried to come to her to the ladies who supplied her with sewing. Jenny was a favorite, and this evening—nay, this hour—was to bring proof of the fact.

For, as she sat, there came a knock at the door—a loud, important knock—and a tall form entered, impressive in capes and buttons, whom Jenny recognized as the resplendent coachman of Mrs. Meredith, a gentle little widow, and one of her best patrons.

"Person here named Forde—Miss Forde?" inquired the dazzling vision. "Yes; that is me," said Jenny.

"Then here's for you. Compliments of Mrs. Meredith, and she hopes you'll have a pleasant Thanksgiving."

"Oh, thank you, sir; and please thank Mrs. Meredith."

With a nod he of the capes and buttons departed, leaving Jenny face to face with a big basket which he had set upon her table. From under its cover an unmistakable drumstick protruded.

"I do wonder if it can be a turkey," thought Jenny, as she lifted the cover.

Sure enough, it was a turkey, plump, lowed on celery stalks and sweet-potatoes, and mounting guard, so to speak, over a mould of jellied cranberry. And what besides? A golden brown circlet, with edge of flaky white. Who can mistake a pumpkin pie? Oh, kind Mrs. Meredith!

The room seemed to have suddenly grown brighter and warmer, as Jenny, after putting away these treasures, returned to her chair and the fire. How pleasant it is to be remembered! What a happy little woman—yes, for all that had come and gone—what a happy little woman she was! So deep were her pleasant thoughts that she scarcely heard the second knock which fell on the door—a low, timid one, as from the hand of a child.

"Come in," she said, dreamily. The door opened a little way, a cold wind swept in from the staircase, but no one entered.

"Well, why don't you come in?" she called out. No one answering, she jumped up and went to the door.

A little thinly-dressed girl stood in the hall. She was strangling a sob in her apron, and when she spoke of Jenny seemed half inclined to run away.

"Oh, please, Miss Forde," she faltered, "could you lend mother a lump of coal? She's got one of her bad headaches—and the fire's went out—and it's so cold—and Alice and me don't know what to do." Another sob rounded the sentence like a period.

Hard-hearted as it sounds, Jenny's first impulse was to refuse. She did not know these neighbors of hers, and, "Once begin, you never know when it will stop," crossed her mind. Another look at the tear-stained face of the child changed her determination.

"Yes," she said; "come in, and I'll lend you a bit. Have you brought something to carry it in?"

"Oh, please, I'll take it in my hand."

Such a little hand! Jenny sighed.

"That won't do at all," cried Jenny. "My coal is all fine; there are no large pieces. Here, I'll take my scuttle and throw some over your fire. You're Mrs. Jenny girl, I think?"

"Yes 'm."

So down stairs they went, and the little guide opened the door of a bare room, and revealed Mrs. Denis lying on the bed under a huddled heap of clothes, and a still smaller child sitting, with tear-glazed cheeks, beside the almost extinguished fire. The room felt alarmingly chill, and when Jenny spoke there was a reply and the figure on the bed looked so white and motionless that her heart gave a loud thump for fear.

Hastily mending the fire, she ran up stairs, filled a saucepan with hot water from her own kettle, and hurrying back began to bathe the head of the sick woman. To her great relief, Mrs. Denis presently opened her eyes, and "Oh, that feels good," murmured. "Oh, that feels good."

"I'm glad it does. Here, I'll dip the cloth in the hot water again for you."

"Is it you, Miss Forde? It's mighty kind you are."

"Oh, it's nothing," in a business-like way. "Don't talk. Keep quite still, and your head'll be better soon."

"I'll be better directly already", while Mrs. Denis, after a few minutes' stillness. "My headaches always go off quick at the end. But you are standing all this while. Nanny, bring a chair, Nanny."

"It don't hurt me a bit to stand," declared Jenny; "I'm used to it. Something else I'm putting out work, I keep on my feet for half a day at a time, and never mind it."

"Ah. It must be good to have plenty of work!" sighed Mrs. Denis. "I've seen the people going up stairs with their bundles, and I'd have envied you, only I was so ill, I was something to be glad for that there was some one had all she could do, even if I hadn't."

The patient sweetness of this speech touched Jenny. She could not speak quite steadily as she asked, "Have you no work at all?"

"Not to mine. I did a pettiest for Mrs. Mallory—that's in the basement, you know—and I tried some of those stop-overalls from Biggs. But it's a hard man he is, and only fourteen cents a pair; and what's that for a day's work? I'd take anything, though, almost, that I could, only for I want it sore for the children's sake."

"Now you must not talk—you really mustn't," said Jenny, alarmed at the flush which had risen in the pale cheeks. "Do try and go to sleep. I'll look to the children's supper. Don't worry yourself about anything, and to-morrow, when you're better, we'll talk about work, and see what can be done."

All her warm little heart was alive now.

"What a selfish thing I am!" she meditated, when, after making the children comfortable for the night, she went back to her own fire and work. "I almost refused that poor baby the coal. Jenny Forde, I'm afraid you're no better than a Pharisee. You've got into a habit of passing by on the other side—looking out for number one, and letting other people take care of themselves. You may call it minding your own business as loud as you like; I say you're a pig." And her philanthropy of broadening under this self-rebuke, a bright thought just then came to her.

"Why not?" she said. "Mrs. Meredith's turkey is big enough, I'm sure. It's a burning shame that I should have so much, and they nothing. I'll ask 'em all up to dinner, and give them one nice Thanksgiving, as sure as my name is Jenny Forde."

It was like a fairy dream to the Denis children when next day Jenny came down stairs with her invitation. And what a dinner it turned out to be! With a traditionally delicious turkey! what lovely cranberry! what a pie! Ah! no one can thoroughly enjoy such a meal save those to whom dinners do not come every day. It is impossible.

During the long evening Jenny learned the history of her new friends it was the common story of widowhood and poverty, with one brighter feature—a sailor brother, who had been "so kind."

"Poor Jim! if I only could know where he is to-day!" sighed Mrs. Denis. "It's fifteen months since we sailed, and never a word all that time, Miss Forde. He left all his back wages for me—the blessed boy that he is. It's his heart's blood he'd give me and the children if he could. And it's well off we'd be at this moment, if it wasn't for that sorrow of a savings bank, which went and broke with all in it. He doesn't know that, poor lad, and it's a mercy I am glad, for he'd fret sorely, Jim would. His ship is a China trader, Miss Forde. Second Mate he sailed the time, and he's half promised me the First Mate's place if he goes again. My employers think the worst of him. And why not? for there's no one like Jim."

"How good turkey is!" said Nanny, who was drying the time-honored wishbone before the fire. "It's quite done, Miss Forde, I think. May I wish it now?"

"Yes. Take hold of one end, and I'll take the other. Now we must each wish. I wish your Uncle Jim would come home quick, and safe and sound."

"Why, that's my wish, too!" screamed little Nanny, as the bone cracked and flew asunder.

But another wish was granted. Week followed week, month succeeded month, but no Uncle Jim appeared, neither was his ship heard from. And still the friendship begun that Thanksgiving between the "fourth floor front" and the "third pair back" throve and flourished. It was not in Jenny's nature to do anything by halves. By her aid Mrs. Denis procured work enough to keep the wolf from the door, and innumerable were the kind offices which her helpfulness enabled her to do for the newly-found friends. One afternoon Jenny popped her head into their room, home, and was carried there at once. The accident was disposed of in three words. Mrs. Denis, after a few minutes' stillness. "My headaches always go off quick at the end. But you are standing all this while. Nanny, bring a chair, Nanny."

"It don't hurt me a bit to stand," declared Jenny; "I'm used to it. Something else I'm putting out work, I keep on my feet for half a day at a time, and never mind it."

"Ah. It must be good to have plenty of work!" sighed Mrs. Denis. "I've seen the people going up stairs with their bundles, and I'd have envied you, only I was so ill, I was something to be glad for that there was some one had all she could do, even if I hadn't."

The patient sweetness of this speech touched Jenny. She could not speak quite steadily as she asked, "Have you no work at all?"

"Not to mine. I did

THE REPRESENTATIVE CANVASS. The official canvass of the votes cast for Representative in this district gives Pallthorp (Dem.) a plurality of 70 over Wood, "on the face of the returns."

But it seems that Mr. Pallthorp is not to be allowed to take his seat at Lansing without defending his title at the bar of the House of Representatives.

Alleged irregularities in the vote of certain Townships in Manistee county is the reason for contesting the seat.

We have authority for stating that Mr. Wood has availed himself of eminent counsel, and proposes to contest the seat with every means at his command.

Our reporter interviewed Mr. Pallthorp on Saturday, and drew from that gentleman the statement that he should exhaust every resource in his power to defend his right to the position to which he has been elected. In short, he proposed to "make his seat cullices bulkazed out of it."

What the outcome will be of this affair, we cannot predict. If the points of illegality are well taken, Mr. Wood has the advantage of belonging to the party of the majority in the House which is more likely to seat its claimants than that of the minority, while on the other hand, Mr. Pallthorp can bring to his aid friends of influence, who will seat him if such a thing is possible.

[The remainder of the report will appear in our next issue.]

The New Orleans Times wouldn't wonder at a Grant revival if the Democrats are not very careful in their legislation between now and 1880.

—Early in the summer thousands of the irredeemable or fiat currency men, it is said, subscribed for the New York Advocate, which they were promised for 25 cents a year. They were notified by reputable newspapers tha no such weekly paper could be afforded for that price, and warned to beware of fraud. But they thought they knew better, and put in their quarters. After a while it ceased to come, and some of them blamed the Postoffice or charged it to the republicans. But the postmaster at Jackson has inquired of the superintendent of the mailing department at the New York Postoffice, and in reply is informed that the Advocate has not been mailed since the 10th of October. But the "flat" subscribers have one resource left. They can write on a piece of paper, 'This is the Advocate," and read that till their subscriptions expire. It will be just as valuable so far as sound financial information is concerned.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., the proprietor of Dr Pierce's Family Medicines, and also of the "Invalids' and Tourists' Hotel, of that city has recently been elected to Congress by the very flattering majority of nearly 3,000. He has already served his constituency as State Senator, and his renowned enforcement signalled that his services have been highly satisfactory.

Specie resumption has virtually taken place already in New York. The bold stand which our country took in the last election against fiat currency has virtually settled the resumption question, and henceforth it is a settled fact that a paper dollar is worth no more nor less than a gold dollar. Wall Street brokers are refusing to give special certificates on gold and no premium is offered. Our greenback dollar to-day is worth one hundred cents.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix.—At a session of the Probate Court for said county, held at the Probate office in the village of Charlevoix, on the 11th day of November, A. D., 1878. Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of John Ogawa-ingwanaquet, minor.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Louis McCloskey, praying to be licensed to sell certain real estate therein described.

Thereupon it is ordered, that Saturday, the 14th day of December, 1878, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that all persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause if they have any why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted: And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

(A true copy.)
J. MILO EATON, Judge of Probate.

DISSOLUTION OF COPARTNERSHIP.—Notice is hereby given that the copartnership heretofore existing between Thomas Lapsley and Jesse Bourne, under the firm name of Thomas Lapsley Co., was on the 27th day of Sept., 1878, dissolved by mutual consent. The business will hereafter be conducted by O. V. Monroe, with whom all accounts of the firm must be settled.

THOMAS LAPSLEY,
JESSE BOURNE.

Boyne, Sept. 30, 1878.

STATE of Michigan in the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix, in Chancery.

Jesse Butler, Complainant, vs Jemeta Butler, Defendant.

Upon due proof by affidavit that Jemeta Butler, Defendant, is the above entered cause pending in this Court, is a resident of this State, that a subpœna has been duly issued in this cause for her appearance, and that the same could not be served by reason of her continued absence from this place of residence, and on motion of Cary E. Call, Solicitor for Complainant, it is ordered that the said defend. ant appear and answer the Bill of Complaint filed in said cause within three months from the date of this order, else the said bill of complaint shall be taken as confessed. And further, that this order be published within twenty days from this date in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed, in said county of Charlevoix, and be published therein once in each week for six successive weeks, such publication, however, not to be necessary in case a copy of this order be served on the said defendant personally at least twenty days before the time herein prescribed for her appearance.

Dated this 25th day of October.

MONEY TO LOAN, on good real estate security. Inquire of A. B. Urquhart, Charlevoix, Mich. 16-1yr

The settlers are flocking into Hayes Township in goodly numbers. We are glad to see it. Hayes, which is nearly all tributary to Charlevoix, is, although as yet comparatively undeveloped, a fertile Township, and must ultimately develop itself into an excellent farming township.

The good Methodist Elder who ministers to the spiritual wants of the people of Evangeline, has had good success in his labors lately. A large number of converts were added to the faith in the Hicks neighborhood, and their stakes have been driven in another part of the town.

THE REPRESENTATIVE CANVASS.—The official canvass of the votes cast for Representative in this district gives Paitthorp (Dem.) a plurality of 70 over Wood, "on the face of the returns"

But it seems that Mr. Paitthorp is not to be allowed to take his seat at Lansing without defending his title at the bar of the House of Representatives. Alleged irregularities in the vote of certain Townships in Manitou county is the reason for contesting the seat.

We have authority for stating that Mr. Wood has availed himself of eminent counsel, and proposes to contest the seat with every means at his command.

Our reporter interviewed Mr. Paitthorp on Saturday, and drew from that gentleman the statement that he should exhaust every resource in his power to defend his right to the position to which he has been elected. It, should, he proposed to "make his seat unless bulldozed out of it."

What the outcome will be of this affair, we cannot predict. If the points of illegality are well taken, Mr. Wood has the advantage of belonging to the party of the majority in the House, which is more likely to seat its claimants than that of the minority, while on the other hand, Mr. Paitthorpe can bring to bear his friends of influence, who will scout him if such a thing is possible.

The New Orleans Times wouldn't wonder at a Grand revival if the Democrats are not very careful in their legislation between now and 1880.

—Early in the summer thousands of the irredeemable or fiat currency men, it is said, subscribed for the New York Advocate, which they were promised for 25 cents a year. They were soundly by reputable newspapers, the no such weekly paper could be afforded for that price, and warned to beware of fraud But they thought they knew better, and put in their quarters. After a while it ceased to come, and some of them blamed the Postoffice, or charged it to the republicans. But the postmaster at Jackson has inquired of the superintendent of the mailing department at the New York Postoffice, and in reply is informed that the Advocate has not been mailed since the 19th of October. But the "fiat" subscribers have one resource left. They can write on a piece of paper, 'This is the Advocate," and read that till their subscriptions expire. It will be just as valuable so far as sound financial information is concerned.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., the proprietor of Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, and also of the "Invalids' and Tourists' Hotel, of that city, has recently been elected to Congress by the very flattering majority of nearly 8,000. He has already served his constituency as State Senator, and this renewed endorsement signifies that his services have been highly satisfactory.

SPECIE resumption has virtually taken place already in New York. The bold stand which our country took in the last election against fiat currency has virtually settled the resumption question, and henceforth it is a settled fact that a paper dollar is worth no more nor less than a gold dollar. Wall St. brokers are refusing to give special or premium on gold and no premium is offered. Our greenback dollar to-day is worth one hundred cents.

THE bull-headed vagrant who claims the questionable credit of running the thing called the Petoskey Democrat, devotes several inches of his last issue to the abuse of the SENTINEL because of its Grant tendencies. We do not care to discuss the Grant question, or in fact any other question, with the Democrat, for the same reason that we would walk around a thoroughly occupied cow yard, or shun a skunk hole. Also because we know what pecuniary consideration was necessary at one time to make the Democrat a Republican paper, and which was refused because there were not brains enough around the institution to pay a decent interest on the investment. When journalism received into its ranks the "editor" of the legend of nothingness represented in the ill-begotten Petoskey Democrat, the fraternity of hod-carriers were wickedly deprived of one especially fitted by nature for that calling.

THE STORY OF A CAT.—Our friend E. Carpenter Esq., has a cat. There is nothing particularly remarkable in the circumstance, but wherein hangs a tale"—not the caudal appendage of the animal, but a narrative of one of the lives and travels of this particular nine-lived quadruped. The scow Blue Belle, Capt. Hank Edwards' lay at C. & B's dock, and the aforesaid feline went aboard and failed to get off when Capt. Hank towed out of the harbor, and in a few days the cat found herself (we are not positive, however, in relation to sex) in Manitowoc, Wis, the guest of Capt. Edwards' daughters. The cat was lonesome, however. She missed the handsome countenance of Harrison, and the towering form of Lemuel, and longed for her old home. Well, it happened that the scow Prince, Capt. Alex. Desk, entered Manitowoc harbor in stress of weather, and fastened up at one of the docks. Carpenter's cat apparently recognized the Prince as a Pine Lake craft, and across the docks of several other vessels she boarded the Prince, and remained until that vessel rounded up at Carpenter's dock in Charlevoix, when she leaped ashore amid the scenes of her former days. It is said that Carpenter's cat won't look at common, unsophisticated tabbies of her neighborhood. She has traveled, and has a history.

There is presented to the people of the United States a simple but a very important question. Shall one half of the country continue to resist the fundamental law, and deprive its citizens of their highest political right? The South has presented this plain issue. The Indian Management.

The Chicago papers of November 22 contain much of the correspondence which has recently passed between Gen. Sheridan, the Secretary of War, Gen. Sherman, the Interior Department, etc., relative to the Indian question. To this summary given in the Inter-Ocean we have added liberal extracts from Gen. Sherman's letter of November 16. The synopsis and letter read as follows:

The discussion in reference to the attitude of the Interior Department toward the army, concerning the conduct of the Indians, has had added to it an interesting chapter this morning. The present correspondence is all together in regard to events that occurred previous to the letter of Secretary of the Interior Schurz, which that official published the other day in reply to certain statements made by Gen. Sheridan in his annual report. Last summer the Indian Agent at the Kiowa and Comanche Agency, in the Indian Territory, communicated to the commanding officer of Fort Sill that the agency under his charge had been ordered consolidated with the Wichita Agency. Gen. Pope, commanding the Department, and Gen. Sheridan, commanding the Division, both protested against the contemplated consolidation and premises of agencies that saved only the salary of an agent to the Indian Bureau, but at the cost of many thousands of dollars to the War Office. The very vigorous protest of Gen. Sheridan was based upon data in his possession of the past and experience of over twenty years. This naturally developed a reply from Secy Schurz, under date of Oct. 7, which is anterior to the letter from the head of the Indian Bureau, which the indorsement was made. You will oblige me by informing Lieut.-Gen. Sheridan that the consolidation of the two agencies above mentioned was ordered by the President of the United States upon my recommendation as Secretary of the Interior, and that my recommendation to the President was made in consultation with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, at which the good of the service and the interests of the Indians were carefully and conscientiously considered.

"It would, furthermore, be well for the Lieutenant-General to remember that the Department will be governed in its relations with the Indians by the principles of integrity, honor and sense of duty, fully his equals, and that it is prejudice to oppose serious reflections upon their motives is an act of culpability against the constituted case without a corresponding rebuke among gentlemen, and especially among high officers of the Government."

This communication was referred by Secy McCrary to Gen. Sherman, who referred it to Gen. Sheridan, "for perusal, to be returned with any remarks he may think proper to make on it."

Gen. Sheridan made a statement, under date of Nov. 15, in answer to Sec'y Schurz's communication, of which the following forms the chief points: The indorsement referred to in the communication of Sec'y Schurz was by Lieut-Gen. Sheridan, was general, and intended to cover operations for the period of twenty years, and it was hoped that it might put an end to such a waste of army appropriations as attended the following: The Agency of the Ouralatit Sioux, ten or twelve years ago, was at Fort Laramie, an expensive post, built to control these Indians. The Agency was removed from it to the Missouri River, to Camp Robinson, and a new post was built there at an expense of which the General of the Army can well comprehend.

The Spotted Tail, or Brule Sioux, were at the Whetstone Agency, on the Missouri River, not far from where Fort Randall had been built, to give it and other interests protection, but these Indians were removed to Camp Sheridan, 250 miles further west; and being unable, after a time, to get along without troops, a new post and so re-established there at great expense. These Indians have been again moved, and two more posts established since; they are now at Wounded-knee Creek and Big White Clay, and by and by the necessity of having troops will compel the erection of two new posts at each of these localities. These removals have cost us hundreds of thousands of dollars, and no one can tell how soon a new change may be made.

Gen. Sheridan then states that, from long experience he is led to the conclusion that the main cause or these removals was hostility to army officers, because of their reports that cause in the line of their official duties. For six years and a half on the Pacific Coast he had observed the same thing. These changes were only some of the expensive conditions attending the Indian Affair administration which have to be borne by the army, and which cried out loudly for reform. The Secretary of the Interior could not undertake to defend the Indian management for the last twenty-five years. Gen. Sheridan says: "Then why should he have used such language toward me as he has in his communications to the honorable Secretary of War! There can be no excuse for this but his want of knowledge on the subject, and that does not excuse the entire tone and the language used."

Gen. Sheridan then concluded his communication by stating that he had established Fort Sill in person after the Kiowas and Comanches had been established at that point, and spent several months in that country. The water at Fort Sill, coming from a fine mountain stream, is the best for over 100 miles. The country is beautiful, the soil rich, and the grasses abundant and varied. The buildings at Fort Sill are of stone and adobe, and there was no reasonable cause for the change. The General's object in writing the indorsement was to put a stop, if possible, to the useless expenditure of the army appropriations.

Under date of Nov. 18, Gen. Sherman adds an indorsement to Sec'y Schurz's letter above quoted, to which he says: "We (Gen. Sheridan and the writer) believe honestly that no fault has been practiced by somebody to influence these high officials (the President, Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs) to remove the large force of Kiowas and Comanches to the small tribes of Wichitas so as to save the expense of one agent.

"Whilst the Interior Department may thereby save a few hundred dollars, the War Department will be subjected to the expense of tens of thousands of dollars, because Fort Sill is a costly post, built specially to watch those Indians and supplied with a large garrison, and probably by general reflection on the Indian Service, without taking the trouble of substantiating with such statements as above, would facilitate the discovery and correction of its abuses. It is the simplest thing in the world to consolidate agencies, and sufficient posts located by good judges for the very purpose of guarding them very Indians, viz.: Forts Sill and Reno, Bob Dents, Pope and Sheridan attribute this change to evil motives. Neither of these officers attribute such motives to the President, the Secretary of the Interior, or Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but they do reflect on the agents, who have advised this measure. Their object was not to prevent a consolidation of these agencies, but if possible, to influence those high authorities to pause in unwise act and to induce them to change the location of the consolidated agency to Fort Sill, which is admirably adapted to the purposes of farming and grazing. It is distant forty miles from Texas, and is on a par with Wichita as to horse and cattle stealing, and while I admit the Indians are the equals of the Texans, the most accomplished thieves of this quarter.

"Disclaiming disrespect to anybody, I assert that the consolidation of these agencies is a wise measure, but the removal of the Kiowas and Comanches to the Wichitas is a most unwise measure, and I advise the Hon. Secretary of the Interior to send a disinterested inspector, who will find that Fort Sill of all places is the best in the whole Indian country for water, soil, climate, everything.

"To change Fort Sill to the Wichita Agency will cost the War Department at least $100,000."

A Simple Test of the Quality of Drinking Water.

Nothing is more important, from a sanitary point of view, than the purity of the water used for cooking purposes or for satisfying thirst. Should it contain an undue proportion of organic matters, it might be the means of giving rise to most serious diseases, often of a fatal character. It is a very common mistake, but nevertheless a very serious one, to regard clear water as pure water; for clear and clean are not synonymous. Of course, the question as to the litness or unfitness of soft water for domestic use can only be determined absolutely by a careful chemical analysis. But since few persons wish to incur the trouble and expense of a chemical analysis, a simple method by which any one may test the quality of the water he uses may not come amiss. As is well known, the sense of taste and smell vary greatly in different individuals, one utterly failing to detect the foul condition of a water which would be very evident to a person of finer organization. Some waters, moreover, of very dangerous quality, will fail to give any indication by taste or smell. But if the nasal organ is bad taste or smell exist in the water, the deleterious effects on the health will remain the same whether they are recognized or not. Heisch's test for this purpose (credited by the Revue Industrielle to Reynoso, of Buenos, is very useful, and so simple that any one can use it. Fill a perfectly-clean pint-bottle three-fourths full of the water to be tested, and dissolve therein half a teaspoonful of the purest sugar (loaf or granulated sugar will do), cork the bottle and set it in a warm place for two days. If in twenty-four to forty-eight hours, the water becomes cloudy or milky, it is unfit for cooking or drinking purposes. If it remain perfectly clear it is safe to use. Cloudiness, when it occurs, is due, according to Frankland, to fungoid fermentation, which takes place in the presence of sugar, and to traces of phosphuric acid occasionally met with in waters contaminated by sewage.—Scientific American, Supplement.

Sec'y Schurz Replies to Gen. Sheridan.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.

The Secretary of War has received, and referred to Gen. Sherman, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, sharply replying to certain statements by Gen. Sheridan in the latter's annual report. Secy Schurz says:

"These statements, as far as they reflect upon the conduct of the Indian Service, are of a sweeping and somewhat vague nature, but it must be assumed that Gen. Sheridan would not have made them and permitted them to become public, had he not in his possession specific information concerning certain acts and certain branches of the Indian Service, which these statements may be held validly applied. Gen. Sheridan, in his official document, gives it as his opinion that, with wise management, the amounts appropriated by Congress ought to be sufficient, if practically applied to the exact purposes specified, but that reports of the Department Commissioner would indicate a different result, except in the case of the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail bands of Sioux. He thinks considerable expense was incurred in collecting such of these Indians as had been induced to settle with the appropriations made for Congress and the specific purposes for which they were intended. It is also his opinion that, before making the sweeping charge above cited, he was cognizant of specific cases in which those appropriations were misapplied or misused, or diverted from the purposes intended by Congress. With a similar object in view in requesting him, Sheridan to communicate such specific cases, or the supplying waste of the agencies of agents, dates and other circumstances which would substantiate the charge, which includes all the Indian agencies in the Territories and the Missouri, except those of the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail bands.

"It has been my constant and earnest endeavor since I entered upon the administration to correct all abuses in the Indian Service that came to my knowledge, and Gen. Sheridan, by furnishing such specific information, would thereby render material service to this Department, as well as to the interests of the Indians themselves. As he has put forth a sweeping charge, the publication of which must be called for, I make this request with particular confidence that I shall receive from him ordinary officers seem of late to have taken into the habit of indulging unfairly and probably in general reflection on the Indian Service, without taking the trouble of substantiating with such statements as above, would facilitate the discovery and correction of its abuses. It is the simplest thing in the world to consolidate agencies and sufficient posts located by good judges for the very purpose of guarding them very Indians, viz.: Forts Sill and Reno, Bob Dents, Pope and Sheridan attribute this change to evil motives. Neither of these officers attribute such motives to the President, the Secretary of the Interior, or Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but they do reflect on the agents, who have advised this measure. A Floating Island.

The following account of a South Pacific wonder is abridged from an article in the Fiji Argus:

The existence of a floating island, Waqanavi, in Vanua Levu, is known to very few, probably, besides those natives who reside in or near the District of Nadogo, to the northeast of the Province of Mathuata. On our arrival at the lake the scene that presented itself was at once most lively and most picturesque. Hundreds of natives, as far as the eye could reach there was a barren waste. We stood in the center of a vast moorland, and the lake had dwindled during a five months' drought to a swamp. There was no sign of life but what was buffaloes battered through. The "tankol" had clambered up a tree on the island (or a tall bush called nalata), and was adjuring the island god to the mere, in the full flow of a smoke; about half a dozen natives were poling about a small island in the highest glee, and a number, both men and women, were on the large island with the "tankol," who seemed to be the genius loci, helping him (with stout poles) to move the mass. Every one was in the highest spirits. One Chief told us that the Waqanavi had sailed across the mere that morning, which we had great pleasure in believing, as the wind was from that quarter, but it was lying on the lee side now and swayed about without progressing much. A light spring of three or four feet landed us on the island, which, without doubt, is silent, and moved a fathom or two when we were on it. Had the wind changed I feel sure we would have been ferried over the water in the Waqanavi. It is fifty paces in length and twenty in breadth, and is composed entirely of firm turf, in some places quite dry, being thickly covered with tall rushes (kuta) beside several nalata bushes fifteen to twenty feet high.

There are four islands in all. Three are of the size and appearance of that on which we stood. One has three balawas trees on it, and appears to have been gore recently detached from the moor. The fourth island is smaller, being only about fifteen feet in length, and on it was the scene of most uproarious mirth. At one time we counted ten men on it. The aggregate weight of the ten people must have been 1,500 pounds, and the island sank several inches, and canted ominously until relieved of part of its burden. The men plunged into the water and swam about, regardless of the grim warning of the old man up the tree that they would be seized by unseen hands below. We were not slow to follow the example of the natives, and jumped in also. The banks are covered with rushes and are level with the water. They do not shelve at all, but go down sheer. Where we landed there was no bottom for at least two or three fathoms at the very margin of the mere. Many places are in good condition had sapped the loose soil under the turf to a considerable distance. At the time of our visit the size of the mere was about 250 yards by 150, but probably after much rain it is three times that size. We had no means of judging the depth either then by swimming, and we can only say that we found it to be more than two fathoms in the middle, but how much more we cannot say, and where the island had drifted to it was two fathoms. The water is stagnant, but not impure; it is not pleasant to the taste, but there is hardly a suspicion of a boggy flavor. The sun was extremely hot, and after our plunge we were arrived in a singularly refreshing condition, and the water felt cool and refreshing. We swam the entire length and back again without finding any snags, or leaves or sticks of any kind.

Adulterated Sugars.

The Tribune will print to-morrow a disclosure of the alleged sugar frauds, adulterations injurious to health, resulting in an annual loss of revenue to the drawbacks to the amount of $15,000,000. Samples of the product of many New York and Brooklyn sugar refineries have been analyzed by sugar experts, and in every instance the investigation has shown conclusively that the sugars have been adulterated by the use of tin and muriatic acid, glucose and other substances. The exact proportion of the adulteration has been found to consist of glucose, a cheap product of corn. Sugar refiners may hold the opinion that their sugars are chemically pure; that is, without any admixture of foreign substance, but probably, on that very point—but the claim of the refiners is overthrown conclusively by the presence of glucose in the sugars which they claim are chemically pure. An analysis of many samples of sugar and syrup have been made, and in but one instance has the sugar been found to be wholly free from adulteration. It is stated that no action will be taken in regard to the adulterations, except by the various Boards of Health.—New York (Nov. 14) Special to Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Advantages of Experimental Study.

A paper read by C. M. Bontelle, at a late meeting of the Minnesota Educational Association, contains the following summary of the advantages that result from experimental work in natural science:

1. The ability to follow directions sensibly; this is something of which we see the need every day in our schools, and it is readily acquired by a course of experimental work.

2. The ability to construct and use apparatus comes from a use of the experimental method of study and teaching. When a teacher or a student understands the use of tools many articles of great use can be made at a very small expense. Students or teachers will be gainers by being thrown upon their own resources. A complete and well-arranged laboratory may be [illegible] to cramp the ingenuity and independence of an experimenter, and so be a positive disadvantage.

3. The actual seeing of a phenomenon, or the handling, tasting and smelling some chemical substance, carries with it a knowledge obtainable in no other way. The student who learns a printed statement is likely to forget it, for the imperfect knowledge has gone into the mind in but one way, and second-hand at that, while the thing itself once known may, whenever uncontemplated again, appeal for recognition to all or to nearly all of the senses. There are colors, for instance, common in the chemical laboratory, that once known are never forgotten, which are beyond the power of words to describe.

4. Apparatus in books always works well. In practice there are accidents the educational value of which the student of physical science cannot afford to miss. If things will burn, or break, or explode, there is no way of knowing it better or remembering it longer than by experience.

5. The reality of some slight change, some variation in the weight, color, or temperature, comes home only to the student who observes the change itself.

6. The cultivation of a scientific faith, of a belief in things understood but not seen, is not the least of the advantages of the study of experiments. Pupils can be led to recite glibly book statements which they do not believe in the way that facts should be believed. Students will look with genuine wonder at a few ounces of water supported in an inverted goblet over the mouth of which a slip of paper or of glass has been placed, but will state without hesitation that the atmosphere presses with a force of nearly fifteen pounds to the square inch and is every direction.

7. The habit of associating phenomena with their descriptions and explanations will be acquired after a time. Students at first find a genuine difficulty in this matter.

8. The habit of seeing what is going on in the world around us grows as we use the method of experiment. There are many things happening all about us from which the skillful teacher can draw illustrations for the use of his classes. Some great advances have been made in science because men saw what happened, how it happened and all that happened. Things had sawing, in Nature and in art, ever since the world began, but an observing young boy (seventy years old, only), a man with eyes and the habit of using them, discovered the principle of the pendulum, before unknown.

9. The one who does experimental work, and loves it, there cannot but come a habit of looking for the reasons of things. "What?" is the question asked of Nature by the experimenter. "Why?" is the question the mind sets itself to answer. Science has always been the paper by the habit of looking for wrong, every theory that attempts to explain a group of related phenomena is put to the test. Theories, now known to be false, mere names long ago marked steps in scientific progress as truth as do the accepted theories of today.

10. The culture that comes from a use of scientific work will have a tendency to make the kind there really is in the everyday and commonplace. It is too late for a failing apple to suggest anew the law of universal gravitation; it is too late for us to attempt to produce, from the fact that if a certain kind of vibration produces a certain sound, repeating the vibration will produce the sound (a fact, by the way, as old as speaking and hearing), a machine like the phonograph or the telephone; but it is not too late for the pupils in our schools to study science and keep their eyes open.—Scientific American.

English Shopkeepers and American Customers.

There has been a somewhat amusing discussion going on in the London newspapers recently about the manners of "Yankee customers" in the shops. It is clear that Americans go into the shops, give an endless amount of trouble to the salesmen in trying to suit them, and then go off without buying anything. One shopman after another writes to the papers and tells how the Yankee customers, as far as they reflect upon the conduct of the Indian Service, are of a sweeping and somewhat vague nature, but it must be assumed that Gen. Sheridan would not have made them and permitted them to become public, had he not in his possession specific information concerning certain acts and certain branches of the Indian Service, which these statements may be held validly applied. FOR THE CURE OF

FEVER and ACUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAME CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, present, and in every case, more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL is the only has the right to manufacture and sell the article known as DR. MATCHLESS WOOD TAG! MANY TOBACCO

PUBLIC NOTICE.

I, JOHN HANNAS, being a Blacksmith by trade, had often felt the want of some means whereby I could retire from it at the longe, so that I could work it at a better advantage. After much study and experiment with different substances which offered the best prospect of success I was at one of these events that I discovered the wonderful effects of Electro Silicon on the Human Body.

I had a defect in three of my fingers which were bent or shut up on my hand in such a manner as to cause CONTRACTION OF THE JOINTS, that they were very trouble some to me in my daily occupation. I could not handle my tools as I wished, and often thought I would have my fingers cut off to get them out of the way. I have since been using the Electro Silicon, and am happy to say my fingers are all straight, and I can use my hands as well as ever. Well, I say, I was struck with Electro Silicon at the time, and of course set to work to find out its coming in contact with my hands.

I took a number of bottles of the Electro Silicon, and one day, wishing to see a certain manner I prepared with my hands, I went to work to see its surprise. I found my cracked fingers straighten out, and I could use as much as ever I could. I found my hands healthy before my eyes. I was astonished at the wonderful effects of Electro Silicon.

I felt a wonderful thing about a mile from my home which I had a number of bottles, and I thought I would go and see my friends. I found them in a terrible condition, and I gave them a bottle of Electro Silicon, and told them to use it freely. I left them and went to my home. In a few days I received a letter from them, stating that they were perfectly well. Their children, who were sick, were also restored to health. I have since then sold large quantities of Electro Silicon, and have never heard a complaint. I have been offered $1,000 for my receipt for making Electro Silicon, but I will not take that amount. I am now making it myself, and intend to do so as long as I live. I am now 72 years of age, and I feel as young as I did 30 years ago. I have been troubled with rheumatism for 40 years, and Electro Silicon has entirely cured me. I have also been troubled with kidney complaint, and Electro Silicon has cured me of that. I have also been troubled with piles, and Electro Silicon has cured me of that. I have also been troubled with dyspepsia, and Electro Silicon has cured me of that. HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—To remove old putty from window-frames, pass a red-hot poker slowly over it and it will come off easily.

—As much nitrate of soda as can be taken up between the forefinger and thumb in the glass every time the water is changed, will preserve cut flowers in all their beauty for above a fortnight. —N. Y. Times.

—Fancy farming may be indulged in, as a recreation, by men with other means of support. Such men may pride themselves in it, and claim to be model agriculturists. They are not true farmers.—Prairie Farmer.

—Dairy Items.—It should be a hixed rule that floors, particularly those of sleeping rooms, are to be scrubbed only on dry days, and where the health of the inmates is delicate the drying should be quickened by lighting a fire in the room.

—There is a profit in brooding nice carriage and draft horses. As a general rule it costs no more to raise a good one than a poor one, while the former will bring two or three times as much as the latter. A dark stable is a very poor place to keep a colt.—Des Moines Register.

—The very best thing to be done when anyone has received a burn or scald, is to lay on the part that is injured a thick coating of cotton, or wadding, so as to completely exclude the air. If the above wool happens not to be at hand, scraped potato or turnip will ease the pain.

—In buying stock steers, pay liberal prices for such ones as have their digestive organs in an active state, and are capable of assimilating large amounts of food. Such animals, having been constantly growing since calfhood, will continue the same course and rapidly increase in weight.—Iowa State Register.

—Fish Cakes—Pare and boil two quarts of potatoes; put one pound salt codfish in about one quart of cold water; let it come to a boil; then pick up fine and put in cold water again and bring to a boil; pour off the water, and then mix potatoes and fish well together; make into balls or cakes, and fry brown with clear salt pork.

—Few farmers buy too many tools, but many farmers buy unintelligently and wastefully. The best tool is always more profitable than the cheap or inferior one, and yet, no matter how good the implement, it is unsatisfactory unless you find for it advantageous use. The saving from machinery comes from use, not storage.—Prairie Farmer.

—Cement for Sealing Bottles, Etc.—Mix three parts of resin, one of caustic soda and five of water; this composition is then mixed with its weight of plaster-of-Paris. The component is in three-quarters of an hour, adheres strongly, is not perishable like plaster used alone, and is attacked only slightly by warm water.—Scientific American.

—Jumiata Omelet.—Beat six eggs separately; mix with the yelks one cup of a half cups sweet milk, a little salt and one heaping spoonful of flour well mixed with a little milk; finally, add the whites beaten to a stiff froth, then pour all into a heated buttered or larded pan and bake in a quick oven, stirring until it thickens, then pour into an omelet or baking dish, and bake in quick oven.

Little Things on the Farm.

"Take care of the pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves" is an old adage which correctly illustrates life as a whole, and not all of its departments are made up of small things. Character, for instance, is the aggregate of small things, of our thoughts first, and their harvest, our acts. Men who despise small things are not our successful men, and it matters not in what calling of life we find them. It is often thought, entirely too often that this regard for little things proceeds from a narrow mind, but it is unbecoming in men of mind and character. If a man stoops to pick up a pin, or a piece of string and save it, there are those who laugh at him for his pains. But a pin is worth something. It represents some labor, and some value in money. A rusted basket full of them would represent considerable of value, and, while if a man's time is very valuable, it might not pay to stop even long enough to pick up a pin, if he had nothing else to do, he had better stop and save even that. The actual worth of this pin, however, is not exactly the entire benefit which results from the act of picking it up. The habit of saving has shown grows stronger every time it is exercised, and it will be shown just as strongly in more important affairs in life. The spirit of derision against those who are said to stoop to such small things would lead to the decline of the Creator himself, if there was nothing too small for His care and protection. The whole universe is a complete system of economy. Nothing is wasted in any part of it.

But nowhere does close economy and the attention to small things pay better than on the farm. The little leaks are what run away with the profits in farming, and it does not require much time or trouble, usually, to stop the leak when it first begins. It is the slightest of work to replace a rail or a board when it has been pushed from a fence, but it is more serious to rebuild the entire fence, after it has been neglected for years and permitted to tumble all to pieces. Nor is this all. A tumble-down fence may cost the farmer acres of grain. Many a farmer has found his corn trampled down by the stock, which never could have entered if he had replaced every rail as it became dislodged. What a decay once commences, it proceeds rapidly, unless checked at once. A laural falls off a building and is not replaced. Very soon another board follows, and it will not be many years before what might have been a good-looking and comfortable building, is a perfect ruin.

We have seen more farms without a hencery. Among the seemingly more important duties, provision for the fowls was thought to be too insignificant to receive attention. The result was that the poultry were roosting in buildings which should be kept clean, and among farm implements which they were disfiguring, if not ruining. More time was spent in cleaning up after the chickens than would have been required to build a half-dozen hen houses. Here was a direct loss, but it was not the only one. The hens had no place provided for them to lay, and so they often sought out the way through the barn loft, where never found, and here was more loss.

And so in very much that is regarded as of equal importance on the farm, neglect results very expensively. On a farm on which every detail is attended to, and the smallest with as great care as the largest, and prosperity will be found there. Leaving out of the question altogether the increased pleasure which comes from having a place for everything and everything in its place—of living order everywhere, there is profit in it. On such a farm the awful barrier never gets what will give a better profit out of it than in it; the bitter is not made in such a way as to be unfit for anything except for grease; the chips about the woodpile are not permitted to rot; the straw stack is not permitted to go to waste; the manure is carefully saved, whether it is made by the cattle, swine or fowls, and in short there is strict economy, order and what always accompanies them, prosperity.—Western Rural.

From High Life to Low.

Almost any day, a woman in not overclean or presentable garments can be seen at the corner of a certain alley-her arm, who has a strange history. She is now very plain, but possibly has been quite a looking young woman. This woman is titled a Countess and Baroness. She is of a good New York family, and was a girl went with her brother to Madrid, Spain, where he was at the time American Consul. Here she married a nobleman from Paris, Count [illegible], and was very gay life in the French Capital for several years; in fact, until she ruined herself by her intemperate habits, and again took here to be a wanderer, a pensioner upon the charitable—sometimes sitting in the Station Houses, and carrying her trays in the satchel on her arm. This Countess is very accomplished, speaks several languages, is a fine musician, paints well in oil and is elegant in conversation. After painting a few miniatures for a living, in the obscurity of her room, if she has one, for the indulgence of her appetite for liquor, sometimes it is sold, and she is plotting given to her by some kind souls who commiserate her forlorn condition, for strong drink; and if one comes to "point a moral" to her, to suggest the use of some of of her gifts to obtain a decent livelihood, she will burst into a rage and look, with the air of a tragic queen.

Do you suppose that a woman accustomed to the society that I have been [illegible] herself in that manner?

An equally-strange history is of a man who now keeps a restaurant in Hoboken, just across the North River. The landlord is an Italian Duke, who flourished here some time since, in fashionable circles, until his fortune was nearly gone. With a very little pittance he retired to a Hoboken hotel, giving up his old associations. Even the pittance was soon gone, and he became first a cook, then a waiter, in the hotel, and, by-and-by, the proprietor, the Duke having died, and he, under an assumed name, having made money enough to procure the business. Time in tolerable circumstances, the Duke resumed his station, but dislikes to have his title alluded to. Upon one occasion a distinguish d Italian was a guest at the house, who had been known in his native land. The Duke put on an apron and served at the supper, and was not recognized. After the meal was over, he came back in evening dress, with a diamond order glittering on the lapel of his coat, when a shout of welcome greeted him from his old friend. "The Duke's House" is famous for its good eating, and the Duke, ex-cook, ex-waiter, is said to be rich and a bachelor.—N. Y. Cor. Columbus (Ohio) Argus.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Nov. 28, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Francis Murphy the well-known temperance agitator, is in the midst of a season here in New York. Like most of the modern popular speakers in the cause of morality or religion, Moodys, Hammonds, Kimballs, &c., Murphy is a "high pressure" worker. He seems to believe with them that reform, moral or spiritual, has thing to be accomplished in a moment: that it consists in a or act of the person to be influenced, and consequently that success in his work consists in wringing from his auditor that word or that act by any means or under any circumstances whatsoever. So he calls to his aid all that is feverish and sensational. He sings and prays, and exerts and tells blood curdling anecdotes, till he gets his hearers wrought up to the necessary pitch of excitement and nervous tension, and then bursts upon them with a dramatic appeal to come forward and sign the pledge. More or less response is received, according to the more or less favorable conditions of the meetings. A certain number of men, women and children rush indiscriminately up to the platform to affix their signatures, and he is wept and rejoiced over by Mr. Murphy as so many brands plucked from the burning.

As I said before, it seems to make no difference what the circumstances of a case are, for during his labors here quite a number of Mr. Murphy's converts have signed their names while almost too drunk to stand, and altogether too much so to know what they are about. But it is all one to the reformer. Those, equally with the rest, become "brothers" and "sisters" the moment the pen drops from their uncertain grasp, and are pointed at, at least by implication, as shining examples for the less impressionable of the audience to imitate.

Temperance reform is a good thing and is sadly needed, and I do Mr. Murphy and his kind the justice of believing them to be earnest men; but what a pity it is that their fervor cannot be kept under the guidance of common sense! How much better would it not be to have fewer signatures to the pledge, and to obtain them in such a manner that its obligations should more seldom prove a rope of sand, the breaking of which only drives to deeper degredation scores of victims to this factitious and involuntary enthusiasm.

This city is again the principle battle-field of another life insurance war, differing in character but hardly less in importance than that of a year ago. The present discussion arises mainly from a combined attack on the old Mutual by a number of other life institutions on account of the former's reduction of its premium rates. Now the mutual is not only he largest life insurance company in the world but the richest financial corporation in the world as well, having over eighty-six millions of assets or twenty millions more than the combined capital of all the banks in New York. Of course, therefore, its course affects that of nearly all the other companies. Equally of course, the latter dislike to have to cut down their profits, and hence the bitter attact. An attempt has lately been made, by the authority of some Boston lawyers, to assail the right of the company to make the rebate, and even to represent its new policies as not good, but these efforts have utterly failed; the highest legal authorities in New England, Judges Foster and Chandler, having emphatically declared the plan legal and the policies so issued "iron clad." The officers of the Mutual have thus far paid but little attention to their maligners. During their twenty-five years' administration Mr. Winston and his associates have built up this impregnable financial structure, and if they cannot now be trusted to wisely administer the affairs of its members, I fear none of their opponents can claim to be competent to correct their errors.

Some weeks ago I noticed passing mention in one of my letters of certain torpedo experiments which were in progress in our harbor, for the purpose of providing means of effective offence and defense in case of a foreign war. At that time such a thing as war seemed too absurdly improbable to talk about; but the somewhat acrid turn which was subsequently taken by the correspondence between Uncle Sam and John Bull over the Canadian fishery troubles shows that there is a possibility, at least of such a contingency, and invests defensive preparations with a reasonable interest. Two successful exhibition in the torpedo line have just been given in the harbor, displaying great ingenity and demonstrating that if the machines invented will work in the hour of need as perfectly as on these occasions, we need have no fear of attack by water even by terrible ironclads which Europe has recently been perfecting.

One of these deadly inventions is a torpedo boat planned by Captain Ericsson, who built the once famous "Monitor," and called the "Destroyer." This wonderful affair is a thin, sharp, lowlying iron craft, adapted to run during action almost entirely under water, thus defying the heaviest missiles that can be projected against it. The most remarkable feature of it is a deep cigar shaped recess in the bow (also under water), which holds a powerful torpedo. At the proper moment this torpedo can be thrown forward by compressed air at almost cannonball speed and with force enough to send it through the water for several hundred yards if need be. The concussion of the torpedo against the hull of the ironclad to be destroyed would explode the charge, and before this unseen, almost noiseless and wholly unavoidable attack, the mightiest vessel that ever was launched, a monster upon whose armored sides the heavier cannonballs might fall with no more effect than pattering rain, would go to the bottom as helplessly and as surely as though riddled by all Jove's thunderbolts.

The other device exhibited for the same purpose is a torpedo which propels itself, and travels through the water hither and thither without a soul on board. It is an iron shell, cigar like in form, and tapering at both ends to a point. In the shell are three chambers. The chamber in the bow is prepared to hold dynamite, which will be exploded either by percussion or an electric spark. The central chamber of the shell contains tanks of carbonic acid and the engine which propels the torpedo. This engine is driven by the expansive force of carbonic acid gas generated under pressure in the tanks, and drives a screw propeller. In the steamer in the stern of the shell is a reel of manila tell wire connected with a battery on shore. By touching different keys of this battery the torpedo is put in motion, turned to the right or left, backed or stopped, as desired. A spark from this battery can also be used to explode the torpedo, if explosion by contact is not found to be the better method. The length of the shell is about twelve feet, and its greatest diameter nearly eighteen inches.

This marvel of ingenuity was maneuvered the other day in presence of a number of English, Spanish and American naval officers, and a great crowd of people. The inventer, Hardy, to whom the occasion was the crowning event of twenty years' laborious and disheartening experiment, sat on the wharf working the keys of the electrical instrument which by means of the wire connection, controlled the movements of the torpedo. By means of this novel arrangement, the inventer was enabled to guide his queer craft through its little cruise of a couple of miles, during which it took any direction, and almost any speed which he chose to give it, and finally came back to its starting point amid tumultuous applause. If Edison desires to keep his preeminence as a master of electrical forces, he must bestir himself after such a miraculous achievement as the one which I have of course but very imperfectly described.

RADIX.

What the South Really Wants.

When Congress enacted that there shall not be any army at such account any how, and what little army there is shall not be used to enforce laws, it was told that at last the foot of the oppressor was lifted from the neck of the prostrate South, or words to that effect; especially when this was coupled with the President's Southern policy, which Secretary Evarts says wasn't really a policy, but only a way of doing things the President has. There was rejoicing and congratulations from Ohio to the Gulf, and from the Atlantic coast of Virginia to the farthest western bounds of Arkansas and Texas. "Ohio!" remarked the exultant bulldozer, the elated White Leaguer, and the hilarious Red Shirter in chorus, "Now we are at liberty once more. Now we can again indulge in those innocent amusements which give to Southern chivalry its peculiar charm, such as hunting the fugitive darkey by moonlight, playing mudcog with the furtive abolitionist, and having fun with the boys at the expense of the obnoxious black Republican. Now this is what we call freedom!" But alas! it isn't. Human felicity is a frail structure, and human anticipations are frequently doomed to disappointment. If it the last of men to laugh at the wrong time, especially if he is foolish enough to place any reliance upon the action of Congress. To speak after the manner of the ancient poets, the Southern Democrat cometh forth like a flower and is cut down, his hope fadeth and his joy is turned into mourning. There is a fly in the ointment; a mistake somewhere in his calculations; in fact Congress made a botch of the job.

The idea was that, if Congress would forbid the use of the army to execute the laws, the laws wouldn't be executed. They may not be really executed; but the attempt to execute them creates an annoying nuisance. True, the iron heel of military despotism is no longer planted upon the neck of the prostrate South; but, what is almost as annoying, the horny hand of the United States Marshal has taken an ungloved hold upon the back of that neck. What's the good of enacting that the troops shall not execute the laws of the United States in the South, if the Marshals go about in this way interfering with the customary pastimes of the Southern Democracy? What the South really wants, and will not be cheated without, is a law of Congress that the national laws shall not be executed in that section at all by any authority, either civil or military. And the question is the execution of the United States laws is not confined to politics by any means, but is nearly as frequent in the case of timber thieves. What's the good of removing bayonet rule if peaceable citizens are to be molested by United States marshals and special agents just for stealing a few miles of logs?

Last year, and this year, the civil authorities of the United States have interfered with the peculiar Southern institution of "moonshining." True, only a little while ago, the President let loose about three hundred South Carolina "moonshiners," who promised that they wouldn't do so any more; but there are already several hundred new cases on hand. The United States District Court of Virginia, at its recent session, issued nine hundred indictments against illicit distillers in that State. In West Virginia, over six hundred warrants are preparing. In Kentucky, there has been a regular guerilla war between the moonshiners and the "moonshinees," and several hundred arrests are expected. North Carolina counts on nearly a thousand similar unpreachments. Georgia and Alabama are just full of them. And all the other Southern States are equally afflicted. The Southern Democracy can't enjoy any sort of peace and quietness so long as the arousing morning eye-opener, the invigorating noonday appetizer, the pleasting afternoon soother, and the sedative evening nightcap are vexed and hazzled in this way merely because the independent spirit of the corn-cracker, sandhiller, tarheel and swamp-sucker scorns paying taxes on his drinks.—Post & Tribune.

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

THE Chicago Inter-Ocean of a recent date notices the following counterfeit bills: A $100 bill on the Pittsfield National Bank, of Pittsfield, Mass., changed from Revere Bank of Boston; a fifty-dollar bill on the Tradesman's National Bank of New York—a very dangerous, because almost perfect, imitation; a five dollar bill on the Pocasset National Bank, of Fall River, Mass., and bills of the same denomination on the Farmers' National Bank, of Virginia, Ill., and on the Manufacturers' National Bank, of Amsterdam, N. Y.

THE Postmaster-General, in his annual report, recommends the entire abolition of the franking privilege and the use of check stamps by all branches of the Government.

THE annual report of the Revenue Marine Bureau of the Treasury Department shows that of vessels wrecked or in distress, with an aggregate of 626 persons on board, 591 have been assisted by revenue cutters. The estimated value of property saved is $1,700,000 and 142 persons were rescued from death by drowning. The expenses of the revenue marine service for the year ending June 30 last were $846,091. The number of vessels in the service is thirty-seven.

POSTMASTER-GEN. KEY has discontinued the Postoffice at Spring Garden, Ala., and ordered the mails for that office to be sent to Ladiga, on account of the riotous demonstrations and threats made by a portion of the inhabitants against a Special Agent of the Department, who had caused the arrest of the village Postmaster for some postal irregularity.

THE twelfth annual session of the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry was begun at Richmond, Va., on the 30th. Twenty-five States were represented. The reports of officers show the Order to be in a flourishing condition throughout the country.

WALTON DWIGHT died at Binghamton, N. Y., on the 19th, and it was thought by some that he committed suicide. Three months before his death he secured policies on his life, in favor of his wife and son, to the amount of $250,000, and paid about $2,300 in premiums. A dispatch of the 30th says his death was undoubtedly caused by gastric fever, of malarial origin.

IN his annual report, the Secretary of the Navy places the estimates for the support of the Navy for the next fiscal year at almost the same amount as that appropriated during the last session of Congress for the year ending June next—about $14,000,000. The report of the Secretary will show that the appropriations have not only been confined within their proper limits, but that there is a small balance to the credit of the Naval Academy and Marine Corps. Unless Congress shall order the building of new vessels, the Secretary, with the means asked for, can render those we now have more efficient and keep them in good repair.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 22d states that the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury for the support of the General Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, other than for the permanent annual appropriations, are $120,197,812; for permanent annual appropriations, $145,669,488. These estimates show a reduction of $6,551,045 from those of 1878. Among the decreased sums asked for is that of $3,292,000 for rivers and harbors, against $6,307,000 the present year.

A TREMENDOUS gas explosion, with fatal results, occurred in a coal mine, at Sullivan, Ind., on the afternoon of the 21st. Of the twenty-seven miners at work in the pit, eight were killed. It seems that two entire or rooms were being excavated toward each other. The gas had accumulated in the roof of one, and the miners in the other had been warned that they were nearing through, and that any more blasting before the gas was passed outright caused an explosion. One of them, unaware of this, fired a shot, and the explosion followed. Twelve men in the upper vein were badly stunned, but not otherwise injured. Seven of the fifteen in the lower vein were saved after the lapse of over an hour, but how they managed to survive in the dense fumes and damp is a mystery. The eight deaths were caused by the shock, or the men soon died of suffocation. A dozen kegs of powder had been stored in a magazine in the upper vein, but fortunately it was not ignited. Four or five courageous men entered the lower vein (200 feet deep, the upper one being forty feet) and rescued the seven survivors, and worked until the afternoon of the 23d, taking out the bodies of the dead, two of the proprietors of the mine being among the killed.

JUDGE DYER, United States District Judge at Milwaukee, has recently decided that the law governing trade-marks is unconstitutional and void.

IN an interview with Baltimore merchants, on the 23d, Secty Sherman indicated the points relied upon to relieve the difficulties attending specie exportations, as follows: The present exchange of coin for greenbacks; the receipt of United States notes for customs dues; the maintenance of specie par throughout the country, after resumption, by receiving them for bonds and customs.

IN his annual report, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs asks for the Indian service during the next year the sum of $5,300,000, which is $900,000 more than the appropriation for the current year. The increase is principally for the purpose of extending educational facilities to certain tribes, and to subsist a number who are unable to help themselves.

THE National Bank circulation outstanding, on the 23d, was $321,853,841. Of coin notes there were $44,468,320. Amount of bonds on deposit to secure bank circulation, $247,605,350; to secure public deposits, $18,870,000.

ON the 23d, the Pittsburgh pressed-glass workers, numbering 1,500 men and boys, were locked out because they declined to submit to a reduction of wages.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Georgia Legislature, on the 19th, almost unanimously re-elected Gen. John B. Gordon United States Senator from that State.

OFFICIAL returns have been received from all the Congressional Districts in Wisconsin. They foot up as follows: Republican, 90,878; Democratic, 82,925; Greenback, 18,086. Total, 190,501. The total vote in 1877 was 178,123.

DENIS KEARNEY, the San Francisco labor orator, left Boston for California on the evening of the 26th. He was accompanied by his wife and children.

ACCORDING to a New York special of the 21st, August Belmont, the American representative of the Rothschilds, does not approve of the attitude of the New York Clearing-House in respect to the silver question. He says it would tend to raise an issue between the West and the East, and cause one section to be arrayed against the other.

THE Executive Committee of the Society of Friends, or Hicksite Affairs recently met in Cincinnati. A report was submitted which stated that, at the beginning of the year, the Friends had charge of seven agencies, numbering 16,000 Indians, but that three agencies had since been taken from them and given to Agents nominated by politicians. The agencies in their charge had made substantial progress in education and agriculture. The committee protested against the transfer, and thought their methods would shortly civilize the Indians and render them self-supporting.

ON the 22d, Commissioner Raum received a dispatch from Columbia, S. C., notifying him that the revenue detachment operating in Abbeville County had been surrounded by a body of armed men, fired upon and ordered to leave the county, two nights before. The force was compelled to withdraw to Abbeville Court-House where they awaited aid. The Commissioner directed reinforcements to be forwarded in numbers sufficient to overcome all resistance and thoroughly police the county. He says he shall oppose any further amnesty in that State.

INDICTMENTS have been returned by the Grand Jury of the United States District Court at Chicago, against ex-Supervising Architect of the United States Treasury, William A. Potter, the present Architect, James G. Hill; Edward Burling, ex-Superintendent of the Custom-House Building of Chicago; G. C. Pruessing, Assistant do.; Mueller & Mills, Contractors, and other parties, on a charge of conspiracy to defraud the Government of large sums of moneys by furnishing an inferior quality of material for the construction of the Government buildings in Chicago.

YELLOW-FEVER NEWS.

THREE yellow-fever deaths occurred in New Orleans, on the 19th.

A MEETING of the American Public Health Association was held in Richmond, Va., on the 30th. Dr. Bemis read the regular report of the Yellow-Fever Commission, which will show that the appropriations have not only been confined within their proper limits, but that there is a small balance to the credit of the Naval Academy and Marine Corps. Unless Congress shall order the building of new vessels, the Secretary, with the means asked for, can render those we now have more efficient and keep them in good repair.

FOREIGN.

A BUCHAREST dispatch of the 19th says the Roumanian Government had refused to grant or Russia the right to cross her territory during the invasion of Bulgaria, as demanded by that power.

ON the 19th, the Pope sent a message to King Humbert, congratulating him on his escape from the knife of the assassin.

NEWS was received in Paris, on the 19th, that Manuel Pardo, ex-President of Peru, had been assassinated.

ACCORDING to a London telegram of the 20th appalling distress existed among the mechanics and laborers of Sheffield, because of the business depression. Hundreds were living in tenements without clothing or furniture, all having been sold or pawned for food. The Mayor had called public meetings to devise measures of relief.

THE Viceroy of India issued a proclamation to the Afghans and Beloochees, on the 21st, explaining that he had no quarrel with them, but that the Ameer had greatly insulted the Empress of India, and he proposed to show that she had the power to avenge the insult. On the same day the British forces occupied Fort Kapyangs, the Afghans precipitately retiring. Upon receipt of the news in London, British consols appreciated, and the Bank of England reduced its rates of discount to 1 per cent.

MR. WELSH, American Minister at London, on the 21st, in accordance with instructions from the Secretary of State at Washington, paid to Lord Salisbury, for the British Government, the $5,500,000 awarded that Government by the Halifax Fishery Commission. Mr. Welsh accompanied the tender with a lengthy letter, stating that such payment was made upon the ground that the United States desired to place the maintenance of good faith in treaties and the security and value of arbitration between Nations above all question in its relations with Her Britannic Majesty's Government, as with all other Governments; but that it was deemed important that Great Britain should be distinctly advised that the Government of the United States cannot accept the result of the Halifax Commission as furnishing any just measure of the value of the participation by our citizens in the in-shore fisheries of the British Provinces, and protests against the actual payment, now made, being considered by Her Majesty's Government as in any sense an acquiescence in such measure, or as warranting any inference to that effect."

On the 21st, Gambetta, the leading French Republican, and De Fountou, Imperialist, members of the French Chamber of Deputies, fought a bloodless duel with pistols at thirty-five paces.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made, on the 21st, that Charles W. Angell, the absconding Secretary of the Pullman Palace Car Company, had been arrested in Lisbon, Portugal, by Mr. Diamond, the American Consul. About $20,000 of the $130,000 embezzled were recovered.

A LONDON dispatch of the 22d announces the capture of the Afghan Fort Ali Musjid, at the entrance of the Khyber Pass. The operations resulting in its capture began on the 21st, and were stubbornly resisted by the Afghans, the British losing being 30 killed and wounded. At nightfall it was evident that the position was flanked, and during the darkness the Afghans abandoned the fort as untenable, leaving behind them their cannon and military stores, and fifty wounded.

ASSASSINATED by a Rome (Italy) dispatch of the 24th the Commissariat had proof of the existence of a vast association whose object is the assassination of King Humbert.

A SOPHIA (Bulgaria) telegram of the 24th says information had just been received there that the Turkish redifs had lately massacred 320 of the Christian inhabitants of Chresaltra in Macedonia.

ON the 23d, the British column operating from Quetlah occupied without resistance the Afghan fort known as Sibi, due east from Dasar.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made on the 24th that the greater part of the garrison lately occupying Fort Ali Musjid had been captured.

ON the evening of the 23d the Marquis of Lorne, Governor-General of Canada, accompanied by his wife, the daughter of Queen Victoria, reached Halifax, Nova Scotia. Violent storms prevailed during the entire voyage, and the distinguished persons composing the Vice regal party suffered severely from sea sickness.

American Beauty in Paris.

What a pity it is that we could not have pictures sent for the Exhibition an exhibit of American beauty; for there is one point on which we far excel all other lands it is the loveliness of our ladies. It is hard to tell which of our leading cities can carry off the palm in that respect. Baltimore, New York, Boston, each has its peculiar type, and they are all exquisite. If one's eyes are dazzled at any of the official balls at Paris by a sudden vision of lovelinness, be sure that she was born and brought up on the other side of the Atlantic. Now, our girls at home are prettier than pinks and peaches, but once get them come to Paris and let their natural taste in dress receive the finishing touches of Parisian style, and the result is well, it is just bewildering. And it is really amusing, if sometimes a little annoying, to note the sensation that one of our radiant damsels will create in any place of public resort. A lady friend of mine, with her husband, took a little shorter journey to the quiet and strictly moral theater, the Opera Comique, a few nights ago. She is a lady who dresses quietly though stylishly and was a perfectly well-bred and modest-mannered girl, but when the party went to promenade between the acts, as the custom runs, the people really walked round and round the dazzling little American, gaping at her with open-eyed astonishment and admiration. Yet she was simply a very pretty little brunette, with a complexion whose cream and roses owed none of their luster to pearl powder or paint. So, if a suggestion of mine, made before the Exhibition was opened, had been carried out, namely, that each of our cities should send a collection of portraits of its famous belles, I trow that the exhibit would prove the most popular one in the Champ de Mars.—Paris Cor. Baltimore Gazette.

—It affords us much pleasure to to learn from a score or two of our exchanges that the writer of those paragraphs has fallen heir to $30,000 by the death of a Dutch uncle in Holland. It was entirely unexpected, but the announcement contains a few items of advice which it may be as well to correct. 1. A person in this country never inherits a fortune of less than $500,000 by the death of a relative in the old country. That is the regulation amount. 2. Our Dutch uncle in Holland was not worth $30,000. 3. He is not dead. 4. We never had a Dutch uncle in Holland. With the exception of those trifling errors the report that we have inherited $30,000 in the manner stated is true enough. The congratulations of our friends are worth more than the so-called fortune.—Williams, in the Norristown Herald.

HISTORY has no hero who is admired by the average boy so much as the man who spits at a mark through his teeth.—Rockford Courier.

WHEN the people go back on a man there is no power else on earth to which he can appeal.

FRANK JOHNSON, recently convicted of burning the Grand Rapids Jail, after which he attempted suicide, has applied for a new trial, swearing the fire was burned by Daniel Wyman, and promising letters from James Finlay, an inmate of the State Prison, in support of his affidavit.

ABOUT four years ago, John H. Bergman disappeared from the vicinity of Hartland after being severely whipped by some of the neighboring farmers, and, as nothing had been heard of him since, it was believed that he was murdered. Latterly, it has transpired that he is living in one of the Southern States, and a committee has been appointed to call upon him personally and clear up the mystery of his disappearance.

THE Big City School Board decides not to insure its school-houses, and the same Board is considering the project of buying school-books and selling them to scholars at cost price.

ON the 14th, at Lansing, the State Land Commissioner sold 3,000 acres of swamp and 3,957.31-100 acres of swamp land heretofore listed as homesteads, which land reverted to the State, at an average price of $1.50½ per acre. There was also sold, at private sale, of the same class of lands, 4,830 acres, at an average price of $1.50 per acre. The bids received for forfeited school lands amounted to $11,000. Of the part-paid trust-fund lands, fewer were sold for the non-payment of interest than for many previous years.

AT W. S. Burt & Co.'s saw-mill, six miles below East Saginaw, the other day, Joseph Burke fell on a gang-edger and was instantly killed.

IT is stated that Houghton County saloon-keepers defy the liquor laws and that the officers dare not arrest them.

A GRAND Haven school-mistress, named Helen Knight, fell dead from heart disease, a few days ago.

WHILE the local freight on the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad was switching at Eyle Lake, a few days ago, John Hutchins fell under the train and received injuries, resulting in his death shortly after.

ADVICES from Grand River state that preparations are being made for putting in from 100,000,000 to 110,000,000 feet of logs—20,000,000 more than has been cut this season. Wages paid are about the same, and cost of supplies a little less than last winter.

AT Grand Rapids, the other day, in the trial of Peter Stelloe for the murder of Eugene Naylor, Dr. Weston, the expert on whom the prosecution relied for the conviction of the accused, refused to testify, for the reason that the Board of Supervisors had refused to allow his account for services in making the post-mortem examination. Judge Hersey did not compel the witness to testify.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A little girl of twelve went to see "Humpty Dumpty" at Oil City, and was so frightened at one of the tricks that she went into spasms and died.

—A gymnastic youth of Lancaster, Eng., lately fell from a trapeze, on which he was practising, only six feet from the ground, and, striking on his head, broke his neck.

—There is a man peddling apples in the streets who is a splendid Greek and Latin scholar, speaking both languages fluently. The Hellenic linguist is also a superb scholar in the Semitic and Sanscrit languages. He was a Professor of Ancient Languages and Applied Sciences at the University of Virginia; is an old, gray-haired man, who gave no name except that of "Uncle Sammy." he is an Irishman and a charming conversationalist. He came to Dallas "busted," and is determined to earn an honest living.—Galveston (Tex.) News.

—A strange case of parental obstinacy and cruelty recently occurred at Boston. A little girl was slowly dying from water on the brain, and "tapping" alone could save her life, but this the parents refused to allow. The entreaties of the doctors and several Catholic priests and nuns were unavailing, but the threat of an agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children to hold them responsible if the child died, at last frightened the unnatural father and mother into submission. The operation was performed and the patient recovered.

—A letter from Hadlyme, Conn., to a Hartford paper records the following: Several evenings ago the original and talented Mr. Rand, violin solo in the Mount band, was attacked and cowhided by the two Misses Blake, daughters of Capt. Ezra Blake, and sisters of the renowned Austin. The affair grew out of a misrepresentation on Mr. Rand's part, concerning the size of Miss Blake's shoes. Mr. R. with his characteristic politeness, would not strike Miss Blake, consequently he received the worst of the affray. Mr. Rand has secured counsel and will make it lively for the fair charmers.

—One of the most ludicrous and sensational results of the Congressional election in North Carolina, on the 5th, took place at Wilson, the day after. On election day John Sims promised his wife to vote for O'Hara, the nominee of the Republican party; but he got drunk and voted for his Democratic opponent, Harris. Knowing that if he returned home he would get flogged, he took to the woods, where he remained until the 12th; when, being almost starved out, he was forced to return. Sims' wife met him on the road, and, having provided herself with a heavy hickory stick, she administered a severe beating on her lord for failing to vote for the man of her choice. The woman was arrested, not, however, until she had given thirty lashes on the back of her husband.

A CORRESPONDENT, writing from Bellton, in this State, says a most remarkable case of bargain and sale took place near that place a few days ago. It seems that a white woman, about twenty-one or twenty-two years old, sold herself through an elderly woman for son, for the express purpose of making a husband of him. The young man was said to have been about twenty years old; the mother, however, sold him for a muslin dress and a few yards of calico. The trade was made Sunday, and the man was to be delivered three miles from the purchaser's house the Tuesday following, and although that Thursday was a bad day—one of those cold east rains that is common this season of the year, prevailing—the fair purchaser walked her three miles in the rain to get possession of her investment, and she got him.—Atlanta (Ga.) Independent.

THE FUNNY STORY.

It was such a funny story! how I wish you could have heard it!

For it set us all a-laughing, from the little to the big.

I'd really like to tell it, but I don't know how to without the words.

Though it travels to the music of a very lively jig.

If Betty just began it, then Amelia Jane would start;

And Mademoiselle and Susan try their very broadest grin;

And the infant Zecharlah on his mother's lap would wriggle,

And add a baby chorus to the very merry din.

It was such a funny story, with its cheery snap and crackle,

And Betty always told it with so much mannerism, too,

That the chickens in the door-yard would begin to "cackle-cackle,"

As if in such a frolic they were anxious to take part.

It was all about a—ha! ha! and a—ho! ho! hol!

It is—he! he!—I never could begin to tell you half

Of the nonsense there was in it, for I just remember

I began with—ha! ha! ha! and it ended with a laugh.

But Betty—she could tell it, looking at us so demurely!

With a knowledge expression that no actress should despise;

And I often have heard it, why you would imagine surely,

That you'd found a lover pocket-handkerchief to wipe your weeping eyes.

When we say her hair is silvery, and my step has grown unsteady,

And the keenest to my vision are the scenes of long ago,

I shall see the gentle mother and the tears may come as ready

As the fun I had, when I used to—ha! ha! ha! and —ho! ho! ho!

—Josephine Pollard, in Scribner for December.

BETTY'S TRAMPS.

Betty was singing, but Betty was not at all light-hearted.

How could she be, shut up in a farm-house on a rainy October day, all alone, the rainy fall weeks and the winter imprisonment near at hand, her mamma over in Europe, and just married to a gentleman she might not fancy for father, and her throat sore with a bad cold, and her lungs so tired of barking? Though a little lady born and bred, she felt restless in every bone of her little body; and she had got to rocking in such a nervous, noisy way, that it is a question whether she knew she was singing at all. Words and music were her own:

Lemuie—lonesie—lonesome—lone!
Lonesie—lone!
Lemuie—lonesie!
Lonesome—lonesome—lone!

I wonder if Step-Uncle Tom really did hear the little plaintive shriek across the sea!

Anyway, at that very moment, he got upon his feet—he was in an inn at Geneva—and brought his brown fist down on the table with a force that made the coffee-cups ring. "See here, Mrs. Sister Elizabeth," said he, I'm going to send 'em over home! They'll be tip-top company for Betty. She's a bright child, I gather, and they'll amuse her—they'd amuse a saint—and she must be amused to death by this time. I shan't want her back, and she's the girl I take her to be, she'll be delighted! What say, Mrs. Sister Elizabeth?"

"I think Betty would be delighted," said "Mrs. Sister Elizabeth," after a little thought. By the way, Mrs. Sister Elizabeth" was Betty's mother.

So "they" were sent. But it was a lot of trouble to do it, I assure you. There had to be a consultation with some way, that there should be so many pounds of beef a day, "a good solid meal," and "Betty always likes to eat." And there was "Baby" in particular. "Mind, now," said Tom, "Baby is to be combed and brushed every day—forty strokes with the brushes every blessed day!" And there were new coulars, with a world of fussing about the engraving and the buckles. And then, when all was ready, and they were on board, they didn't want to go at all. Tom shed a tear or two himself on the way back to the hotel. Then he sat down and wrote a letter to the young American step-niece he had never seen, in which he told her he knew she was "a little brick," and then "Hamlet the Dane," "Edward" and "Harry Hotspur," were three as fine, trusty fellows as ever lived. As for "Baby," he added, "you'll love Baby! And I'll pay the bill—trust me!"

Little American Betty got the letter from Geneva in due time. She may have been "a little brick" and I suppose her Stanly young Step-Uncle Tom meant no worse by that than that she wasn't afraid to do anything she had considered it good to do—but she looked anything rather than a bold, rash young creature, as she walked down to the big gate to meet Charlie Higbam, who she knew would bring the mail on his home from the village. She was simply a nice-looking, brown-eyed girl of fourteen, with refined features, her brown hair hanging in a soft, silken, curly mass, her dress plain and substantial, though her pretty lace bib was dainty enough to please a Princess.

She got only one letter, though it was the day for the foreign mail and her mamma's weekly epistle, and she turned back dreadfully disappointed, wondering who had been writing to her in that fig, sprawly hand. But the name at the bottom of the letter told, for her mamma had frequently mentioned her husband's brother, Tom Dent.

"My dear niece," read Betty. "I suppose he thinks he's my Uncle Tom," said she, spitefully, "but he'll find he isn't!"

She read on, with big eyes, about "Hamlet the Dane," and "Harry Hotspur," and "Edward" and "Ho-ly!"

Who were they? And coming to feel "Betty always likes to eat," she changed their positions and got nearer her. Suddenly, just as Janet was beginning to doze in her chair, "Harry Hotspur" lifted his nose, then pricked up his ears. Betty put out her hand, but he withdrew his head—he plainly wished to listen.

At that moment a knock sounded on the hall-door plainly to be heard even in all the stormy uproar.

Betty got up, Janet opened her eyes, the dogs rose.

"Somebody's"—

Yes, knock-cock-cock! went the rap.

"Somebody's knocking at the hall-door," continued Betty. "I'll go let them in, she's in!"

Old Janet caught at her arm—the dogs were barking now. "Are you crazy? It's for no good anybody's knocking this time of night! I'll tell you who it is—it's a tramp!"

Betty hesitated, looked thoughtful—it might be a tramp, really. The dogs had surrounded the door that opened into the hall and were making a great noise, pawing and leaping as well as barking. "Back!" said Betty, in her arms, was trembling, but trying to get down.

Knock! knock! Rattle—rattle!—on one of the sitting-room window-blinds! Betty thought she heard a voice—two voices.

"Janet," she said, in a low tone, "What shall we do?"

"That's no neighbor's voice," answered Janet. "It's a tramp, I tell you, and he'll get in, too, if he goes to the west bedroom window, for the shutter's off, you know, and the fastening don't work well. Just be murdered in our beds, child!"

"Pshaw!" said Betty. But she looked sober. She tried to listen, but the dogs were barking and scaring us at the door she couldn't hear anything. Hark! they are around at that west bedroom window.

Poor little Betty shook as badly as Janet for a moment or so. Suddenly a light came into her brown eyes. She leaped like a little cat to the dogs. "You blessed old boys! you shall go out if you want to!"

Noiselessly she unclosed the sitting-room door, and, almost trodden under foot among the eager animals, she reached the hall door, swiftly drew the bolt, and the dogs rushed out, pell-mell, barking, toward—

She had a glimpse of figures coming round the corner of the house that left hardly strength enough to push the door shut and shove the bolt. This accomplished, just as a great melee of barks and shouts and raps broke against the solid oak door, Miss Betty got back somehow, at last, into the sitting-room to Janet's side. "Cover my head up with your apron, oh, do, Janet, tight!" she shuddered. "The dogs have got 'em down, and I can't bear it! I can't bear it!"

How long they sat there, they didn't know. When they uncovered their heads at last, nothing was to be heard.

"Do you think it was wrong, Janet?" Betty asked, after a while.

"No," said Janet.

"But, why don't the dogs come back, do you suppose?" Betty began again, presently. Not a bark, not a whine, not a single scratch on the door had been heard.

The storm had gone down. It was about two o'clock. Janet was fast asleep in her chair when she was awakened by a shake of the arm.

"Janet," said Betty, "go fasten yourself in somewhere, and then I'm going to open the door and call the dogs."

Janet was aghast. "You'll surely be shot down," she said. "I know them were brave dogs."

"Tramps or no tramps, I am going to call my dogs," said Betty. "Go into the kitchen bedroom, there's a good lock on that door, and you can take the poker with you, beside."

Janet wasn't quite such a coward. She trembled and shivered, but she went to the door with Betty. All was dark, cold and still.

"Hamlet! Harry Hotspur!" Betty called. "Harry-ree! Harry-ee!"

Hist! Was that a bark? She called again. Then she whistled. Again there seemed to be barking somewhere, far-off and stifled. But no dogs came.

For half an hour, or more, she called and whistled, Janet quivering and glancing about, at her side, and sometimes, as at first, they seemed to faintly hear the dogs somewhere. At last, however, they shut the door and went in, and then Betty began to cry, a nervous, uncontrollable sort of sobbing, and Janet could do nothing with her.

Janet's own spirits rose as it grew nearer day. "Shoo, shoo!" said she, lightly. "The dogs'll be back fast enough when it comes light. They're off gambolling in the new snow, somewhere, or else they're chasing them tramps clean out of the country. They've saved our lives, anyhow, and I'll roast 'em a turkey apiece for their Thanksgiving dinner, see if I don't—that's the way I'll thank-ye!—I wouldn't cry so, so near mornin' seems to me, after I'd stuck it out so brave all night as you have!"

But Betty did. She was crying still when Robert came. To him the night's experience was duly related. He laughed incredulously. "Tramps!" said he. "Tramps don't prowl such nights as last night was! Nervous as witches, that's all!" he added, as he went plowing through the drifts out to the barn.

Now the barn was at some distance, but still in plain view of the kitchen window, where Betty sat, her bosom still heaving with a dry sob now and then. So she saw it all—when Robert opened the big barn door, and the dogs came tearing out at him. "Why, why!" cried she springing up, "how did they come to be in the barn?"

But by the time Janet had reached the window they had disappeared within, and Rob

NEW COMERS.—John O'Neill and family, for some time past residents of Beaver Island, have taken up a permanent residence here. His three sons are expected daily, and they will bring with them the fishing-tug Kitty Gaylord, of 13 tons measurement. They will fish off this port.

BOYNE ITEMS.—Barnhisley's grist-mill is in full operation.

—The saw mill of White Brothers is getting ready to commence operations.

—D. Halliday is clearing off his lot preparatory to the erection of a residence.

—Richardson & Kingsbury have opened a store in George Thompson's building.

—A donation for the benefit of the Rev Willard Heath was held at Hall's Hotel, in the village of Boyne, on the evening of Dec. 5th, which netted $47.31. The occasion is spoken of as a very pleasant and enjoyable affair.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.—The Southern chivalry in Congress are showing the clown foot already. At a meeting of the House Committee on Commerce held on Tuesday, the Southern members showed a disposition to oppose the introduction of any river and harbor bill this session. The appropriations made last year for the North were mostly used, but many of those for Southern creeks were not used, on account of "yellow fever and other causes." The Southerners, with their true "dog-in-the-manger" spirit, propose to run this year on the old appropriations, and let Northern harbors wait a year. Oh, that "the yellow fever and other causes" had waltzed around among some of those Southern Congressmen a little.

A NEW PROPELLER.—Perry Hannah, of the firm of Hannah, Lay & Co., of Traverse City, was in Detroit last Friday to consult with a vessel architect as to the plans for a new propeller. Her dimensions are not yet fully decided upon, but she will be about 140 feet long, of good breadth, and must not draw over eight feet of water. Her cabin is to be fitted up for the passenger trade, and the propeller will be first class in every way. Mr. Hannah says that she must be able to make fourteen miles an hour and do it easily. It is likely that a Detroit firm will build the propeller, which is to be got out ready for the spring business.—Grand Rapids Eagle.

It has been for some time an open secret here that Hannah Lay & Co. were about to build a propeller for the route between Traverse City and Little Traverse. She is to make Charlevoix harbor a regular stopping place, and will be commanded by Capt. O. E. Wilbur, who for the past two years has sailed the Clara Belle.

Secretary Sherman's Report.

A summary of the report of Secretary Sherman is here given:

THE REVENUES.

The ordinary revenues from all sources for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, were $257,767,476 70. The ordinary expenditures for the same period were $236,964,978 26, leaving a surplus revenue of $20,799,551 80, which was applied to redemption of United States notes, leaving a reduction of fractional currency, the increase of the sinking fund and the augmentation of the cash in the Treasury. The deficiency in the sinking fund for this year was $14,826,440 00. There was an increase of receipts for the year was $11,385,707 02, and the net decrease in expenditures $1,990,982 12 as compared with the preceding fiscal year. The actual receipts for the first quarter of this year were $76,206,797 46 and the estimated receipts for the remaining three-quarters, $181,100,278 87. The actual expenditures for the first quarter were $78,314,578 27, and the estimated expenditures for the remaining three quarters $186,765,402 73, or a total of receipts for the year, of $394,500,000, and of expenditures $340,100,000, leaving a balance of $54,400,000, applicable to the sinking fund, which is estimated for the year at $36,054,067 87. The estimates for the fiscal year 1880 are: receipts, $364,800,000; expenditures, including sinking fund, $276,137,260 94, showing an estimated balance of $10,537,260 94, excluding the sinking fund there will be an estimated surplus of $48,195,187 39. These estimates are based on the congressional appropriations of the present year.

The estimate of revenue, based upon existing law, the Secretary says, is $6,736,121 06 more than the actual receipts of the past year. This estimate can only be realized by such an importation of foreign goods as existing laws invite. This is not only enhancement of revenue, but is the right of a free people to buy of whom they please. The enforcement of the law on spirits will prevent, to some extent, the frauds practiced by formidable combinations too powerful for the Department, with the forces at its command, to overcome. The evasions dating, in many cases, from decades by smuggling, false weights, undervaluation, and false claims for drawback, are of long standing. Some of these obstructions are incidental to the execution of any tax law, but many of them can be overcome by modification of the laws, as Mr Sherman suggests.

SPECIE RESUMPTION.

In regard to the resumption of specie payments, no material step can be substantially carried forward beyond the provisions of the act of 1875 by the gradual substitution of fractional coin for currency, as the law directs. The gold now held by free banking. There remains only the consideration of precautions for resumption in coin on the 1st day of January, 1879, and its realization. Should the banks of existing law the subject of the Secretary has been accumulated a coin reserve of $148,062,000. During the small of reserve upon which resumption is undertaken he considers the amount of coin held in the Treasury, on the 29th day of November, in excess of $15,000,000 for all such liabilities, was $41,888,188, and considers this sum properly provided for resumption. This sum would be diminished somewhat in the 1st of January, by reason of the payment of interest accruing on bonds in excess of the receipts of that day, but this would be more than supplied with the New York Clearing House on the exchange of drafts in settlement of banking transactions, and after the 1st of January, 1879, the Secretary would be enabled by the associated banks of that city, as calls. These circumstances, in connection with the increasing stock in his opinion, with increasing business and confidence. The Secretary says that he considers enough the means at his command to maintain the resumption of specie payments, and to redeem at any time within one year after their issue into the 3 per cent. bonds authorized by the funding act, and to be issued only in exchange for United States notes, which the Treasury by half or cash, the money so received could be applied to the redemption of the 5 per cent. bonds.

NATIONAL BANKS.

On the 1st of October, the number of National banks in existence was 2,063. The amount of issue, circulation notes outstanding, including those in liquidation, was $324,147,719; the capital paid in was $460,147,450; the surplus fund was $137,831,000; the loans and discounts were $680,021,042.

COINAGE.

The value of the gold coinage executed during the last fiscal year $52,798,980 00
Of trade-dollars 11,678,010 00
Of standard-silver dollars 8,578,500 00
Of fractional-silver coin 8,389,315 50
And of minor coin 30,604 00

A total coinage of $81,120,409 50

In addition to the coinage, fine and unparted bars were prepared for deposites in the amount of $12,091,020.50 in gold, and $11,300,000.00 in silver.

The amount of gold coin and bullion in the country Sept. 30, is estimated by the Director of the Mint at $260,958,000, and of silver coin and bullion at $99,000,000—a total of $359,441,947.

ENGRAVING AND PRINTING BUREAU.

At the close of the last fiscal year there was an unexpended balance of $952,826 17 of the appropriation for latest and other expenses of this year. Of this amount, in accordance with the act approved June 20, 1878, the sum of $727,286 50 will be expended in the purchase of a site for and the erection of a fireproof building for the bureau, the work on which is now progressing satisfactorily, and will probably be completed during the fall of 1879. It is assumed, from addition of the cost of the last mentioned item, that it holds that the engraving and printing of the public securities can be more cheaply, perfectly and safely done in this bureau than in any of the private institutions. The Secretary has, therefore, directed that all work of this description, except certain proprietary stamps, shall be done therein. The cost of the work is less than one-half the prices previously paid.

CLAIMS.

The Secretary calls the attention of Congress to the necessity of some legislation as to the adjudication of claims which are now within the jurisdiction of his Department. While the Department is well organized for the investigation of accounts according to the ordinary course of current business, it is not adapted to the examination of old and disputed claims of a different character. For the proper investigation of such claims the methods adopted in all our courts for ascertaining the truth, by the testimony of witnesses, are essential. This legislation will require the best evidence of which the case is capable, and will admit the production of original papers rather than procedure proofs, the same evidence as is required in suits at law in his own knowledge and not the hearsay or third parties, the examination and cross-examination of the witness not his ex-parte statement privately taken, a public hearing at a public record of proceedings open to inspection, is essential. He recommends the establishment of a court to which such claims might with propriety be referred.

COLLECTION OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. Sherman devotes considerable length to the question of the collection of customs on imported goods. He calls attention to the fact that the interest of parties engaged in defrauding the revenue is great. He advises a change in the mode of levying duties on sugar. In this connection he says: "Undoubtedly the best method of ascertaining the true duty on sugar, and shows that during the year ending June 30, 1878, there was refined in bond at this port, on goods imported into the United States, 1,000,000,000 pounds, on which $15,000,000 of duties were collected. Of this amount 181,000,000 pounds were exported, on which $2,715,000 of duties were refunded, leaving $12,285,000 as the net amount of revenue received for consumption. This sum would be diminished somewhat by the payment of drawback on the exportation of domestic sugar manufactured from materials exempt from duty. It is believed that a large amount of domestic sugar was smuggled with the New York Clearing House on the exchange of drafts in settlement of banking transactions, and after the 1st of January, 1879, would be received by the associated banks of that city as cash. These circumstances, in connection with the increasing stock in his opinion, with increasing business and confidence. The Secretary says that he considers enough the means at his command to maintain the resumption of specie payments, and to redeem at any time within one year after their issue into the 3 per cent. bonds authorized by the funding act, and to be issued only in exchange for United States notes, which the Treasury by half or cash, the money so received could be applied to the redemption of the 5 per cent. bonds.

NATIONAL BANKS.

On the 1st of October, the number of National banks in existence was 2,063. The amount of issue, circulation notes outstanding, including those in liquidation, was $324,147,719; the capital paid in was $460,147,450; the surplus fund was $137,831,000; the loans and discounts were $680,021,042.

of commerce, 1,936 lights (including 636 on the western rivers), 471 day beacons, 55 fog signals, operated by steam, 56 not air engines, and 2,092 buoys. The board, having in view the necessity of keeping the estimates down to the lowest figure, has recommended no new works which can be safely and judiciously deferred to a future period. Those that are asked for are deemed of immediate necessity. Congress, at its last session, made an appropriation for the commencement of a lighthouse on Americus Shoal, Florida Reefs. As this undertaking will be commenced on the early day, an additional appropriation is required to go on to the work this year. The building of this structure will complete, for the dangerous reefs of Florida, a system of lights that was recommended in the early days of the Lighthouse Board. An appropriation of $50,000 is asked to begin the erection of a sea-coast light at the South Pass of the Mississippi River. Among important work recently undertaken, and for which a large sum is required, is the structure now in course of construction on Samuel's Rock, in Puget Sound. The board has, by a modification of the original plans, reduced the estimated cost about $100,000. This work should be completed at an early day. An appropriation of $30,000 is asked for the purpose of making an addition to the building in which photographic and other printing is executed under the auspices of the Lighthouse Board. A like amount is asked for the purchase and increase of apparatus required for

THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, DEC. 10, 1878

FOR PRESIDENT,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR PARIS LETTER.

New York, Dec. 6, 1878

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The old maxim about a thousand cures a supply, is good enough, and perhaps true enough, but there is a converse to it, which is just as good, though frequently overlooked, and that is, that supply will create a demand, if properly introduced. For instance, the King of the Cannibal Islands would never have been so exalted as he is reported to have been, for using unnecessary fat in his curries had not gone out to his dominions. Previously, His Majesty had had to eat men—and it was content, not knowing any better—with "long pig" in shape of baked victims of his wars, or an occasional wrecked sailor. When the missionaries appeared, steel, with her attendant evils, and Christianity, the demand for sailor fat vanished at once. This may seem a humble rose way of putting things, but the fact is there, and the moral may be gathered from what follows.

One year ago I became actively associated, in a journalistic capacity, with the revival of export trade in this country, and this connection have held my attention constantly directed to the surprisingly rapid development of this all important branch of commerce. The subject of foreign trade, the great element of national prosperity, is of such vital interest not only to the nation but to every one of its citizens, that I think I have done no other excuse for devoting this letter to its consideration.

The amount of the exportation of the United States may be sketched in a very few words. Half a century ago it commenced to assume fair proportions and from that time on was large in comparison with our population. American enterprise was proverbial. Ships with the stars and stripes floating from their lofty spars plowed every sea. Our taxes were light and we made up by energy for the comparative lack of capital of our merchants. We found a ready commerce answer the world, and sought out remote and unfrequented markets, which our competitors had left untouched. At last our war came. The great nation needed vast supplies, and in supplying them and the people whom as isolated currency but rendered extravagant, our manufactures and merchants lost their hold of foreign markets which they had acquired with great pains and care. "Our great home market" was the motto. Capital poured in for such profitable investment. Factories multiplied, improvements in machinery were daily devised and protection rose to an enormous volume. Then came the reaction. Taxes grew heavier and heavier, while our means, national and individual, grew lighter and lighter. Manufactures kept up the scale of their operations and the foreign outlets for goods being closed, the latter commenced to pile up, prices broke away and commenced falling through apparently illimitable space, and then arose the general cry of "over production."

We have all suffered by the past years of business depression and disappointment. The hard times have been, by far, the hardest ordeal our country has had to pass through through since it was a country. I need not draw a picture of its demoralization and its suffering. Their visible presentment is too familiar to us all. Neither is there any necessity for going into all the causes of the general paralysis. It is enough for my present purpose to point out that had we preserved the foreign trade of the last generation on such enormous and utterly deplorable state of things could have so long continued as and to call attention to the marked improvement in the country's condition during this passed year, the dawn of our reawakening on this subject.

It was to aid the movement of our surplus productions abroad for the double purpose of turning the balance of trade in our favor, and of keeping up the value of our currency, that I commenced to devote my energies to the subject, feeling that every man should do his duty in whatever sphere he was working, and enabling each to perform not only the best necessaries of life, but to surround himself and his family with the comforts and conveniences which go so far to make life worth living, that the export revival now vigorously in progress was begun. Last year I entered in it with do no work.

Hard proof be required in the close relations of export and prosperity, I point to the fact that the long term of depression and starvation now passing away included a series of years when in wealth our country was never richer. Never have we seen more abundant crops. Never were our farms more productive, our inventors more ingenious, our resources more magnificent. Our cereal crops are grown in fields of thousands of acres each, and cultivated and gathered by wonderful machinery.

But our great glory is not to lie in our furnishing merely the rudiments of the world's wealth. Why should we produce raw cotton, and grain, and metals, for foreign ships to take to foreign lands, and lounge manufactures to work up for a world wide commerce which we neglect? That is what we have been doing. But, fortunately, the day of that folly is past. Our exports of manufactured goods have been largely exceeded of late. The English papers have teemed with articles expressing fears of our successful rivalry, and William Ewart Gladstone, the great British statesman, has conceded the formidableness of our opportunities and incipient achievement, in a recent paper, entitled, "Ring Beyond Sea," which has evoked such a storm of wrath and alarm among his countrymen, and which has been so extensively quoted that it is unnecessary to do more than to allude to it here.

In the dry goods trade, though the Boston merchants of thirty years ago had no little export business, the tradition alone of export was left, the large profits at home during the war and the total cutting off of our shipping interests having combined to cause its entire loss. That has revived. So far this year we have exported from the ports of New York and Boston alone no less than 110,000 packages of domestics, against 24,000 in 1871, and against the merest nominal shipments, hardly amounting to that total altogether, of the preceding ten years. We have sold our cottons at Manchester itself below the cost of British goods, and the character of our work has received the high endorsement of having our brands fraudulently affixed to the inferior productions of British and German factories, to be palmed off on the natives of India and China.

In machinery, etc. It is very much the same way. All over wherever introduced the American goods are recognized as superior to the European productions of the same kind. American handiwork in general is ingenious, strong, graceful and very perfectly adapted to its function; and thus it is that we have obtained and are constantly strengthening our hold on the non-producing markets. It is noticeable, too, that it is the better classes respectively of the numerous American specialities that have been pushed the most vigorously and have found the greatest favor abroad. It is the McCormick reaper that has low the grain fields of the world, and Buffalo made machinery that crushes the cane and prepares for market the rice and coffee of the tropics. Steinways pianos occupy the favored position in the private concert rooms of Queen Victoria's favorite resorts at Balmoral and Osborne, in the salons of the haute noblesse all over Europe, and even make musical the cabinet of the heathen King of Burmah. The Howe sewing machine, the standard of our own custom houses and post offices are in general use in many parts of Europe, and are rapidly finding their way into the factories, the workhouses and even the armies of the rest of creation. Our various patented lamps illumine the lowly huts as well as the more pretentious dwellings of the South American and the Australian, and even the bamboo dwelling of the said Hindoo, who clothes his wife in Waltham cottons sewn with Yankee thread upon Yankee sewing machines, of which, as every one knows, thousands and thousands are each year scattered to the ends of the earth. The old fash Thomas clocks, from Connecticut, hang on the walls of the Sandwich Islander and the Turk, and Russian and the Egyptian, and watches from Waltham are fast supplanting the Swiss article in their pock

Fine Job Work of Every Kind

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this. If you will only throw aside prejudice and Scepticism, take the advice of your friends, Geo. W. Crouter, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many Physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an estimated fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of Lung Diseases. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Colds settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint Consumptives try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by your Druggist, Geo. W. Crouter.

The Petitsnd Press in a neighborly way advises the South that if it would have the Southern question closed forever, it must cease its efforts to destroy personal liberty, to disfranchise voters, and to carry elections by terror and fraud.

Postmaster General Key assures his solid Southern friends that nothing can prevent the Republicans from keeping control of the government for half a generation to come, if the sectional line is drawn and a solid North is arrayed against a solid South.

The Mariner's Cautionary Signal.

The cautionary signals for shipping are upon the coast, seaboard, or lake, and in view of the mariner. Each is under the charge of a Sergeant and assistant, whose duty may be described as pickets of warning on the fringe of the country. The observations from the observing stations having converged upon Washington, and the general and special predilections arrived at, the announcements radiate from the central office—the brain—along the wires, or nerves, to the remotest digits upon the signal indicator.

When, as is sometimes the case, the signal station is placed in the Life-Saving Service Station, a farther advantage is gained, as the two work well together, and the Life-Saving Service has the benefit of the wires of the signal service.

The cautionary signal of the United States Signal Service is a square red flag with a black square in the center by day; a red light is used by night. The flags are of two sizes—15x15 feet and 8x8 feet, the black square being one-ninth of the area of the flag. The larger flag is used for important stations, about ten in number, and the smaller flag for the other stations.

The stations on the Atlantic are from Maine to Texas, and on the lakes from Oswego to Duluth. The number on the Atlantic coast is the smallest, as the lakes have fifteen stations. Warning notices are also sent by telegraph to the Canadian Meteorological Service when any disturbance occurs which is likely to affect them, and is distributed to the points interested.

The purport of the signal is this: "A wind having a velocity of twenty-five miles an hour may shortly be expected at this place."

That is all that the flag professes to say; the probable excess over twenty-five miles an hour, and the direction of the wind, are not given by the flag. The time may shortly arrive when, by an extension of the system, the additional data, such as "severe storm expected," may be embodied in the signal; but at present the notice is just what it is called and professes to be—"cautionary." It is then the duty of the mariner, shipper, or whoever else is interested, to consult the weather record, for further information, and to make frequent examinations of local barometers and other instruments, and study the local signs of the weather.—Ben Brought, in Harper's Magazine for December.

Relationships of Birds and Reptiles.

We have now passed in review various remarkable forms—living birds and living reptiles, separated by an immeasurable distance from each other, and forms which have so mingled the characters of both as to present great difficulties to their being included among the members of either group. Starting from the groveling crocodile, we have seen that there existed gigantic crocodile-like forms, such as the gracile lizard and the iguanodon, that walked, sometimes at least, on their hind-limbs; others, like the long-necked, flying-lizard compsognathus from the Solenhofen slates, that hopped on the ground after the manner of a bird; then "flying dragons," with bird-like brain and bones, that cleft the air with their twenty-feet expanse of wing; next, unboothed birds, with toothed bills, the one with reptilian vertebræ, the other with a beaver-like tail; while last of all, omitting the imperfectly known Sheppey fossil, the feathered archæopteryx, with seventy caudal segments bar its entrance to every existing family of birds.

Without by any means asserting—what is not only far from being an ascertained fact, but is indeed very improbable, for we are not in a position to state that they appeared on the earth intermediately between the two groups—that these forms are the direct terms in the series of progressions from reptiles to birds, we can in their intelligent contemplation, without overstraining the imagination or violating our reason, picture still more modified forms wherein the reptilian and the ovarian types would so harmoniously blend, that we should find it impossible to say, "At this point the line between reptiles and birds must be drawn." There can be reasonable doubt but that the remains which only through the circumstance of a happy burial have been preserved to us from the second great era of the world's history till now, are no more than a very few examples, with many a blank between, of the fauna which have lived and died, whose tombs no man wonders.—Henry O. Forbes, in Popular Science Monthly.

Obituary.

—Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., of New York, beg to warn the public against a party calling himself M. S. Gardiner, who is representing himself as an agent of Appleton & Co. They have no such person in their employ, and are continually receiving complaints from persons who have been defrauded.

—For stealing a penny apple a little boy, of Coleford, Eng., has been sent to jail for fourteen days, with an additional term of two years in a reformatory. Mr. Cross, the Home Secretary, inquired into the matter, and an answer was returned that the boy was an incorrigible little rascal.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Prof. Arnold, of Rochester, N. Y., denies that tomatoes produce cancer.

—The present Mrs. Ole Bull is the second lady that has borne that name, and is an American.

—Mr. Arnold Hague, a son of the Rev. Dr. Hague, of Boston, has been engaged by a Chinese Viceroy to look for minerals in the mountains of Northern China.

—Mr. W. W. Corcoran, the Washington banker, has presented the State of Louisiana with an historical painting of the Battle of New Orleans, by a celebrated French artist, and costing $20,000.

—The Rev. Robert Collyer says that the story of the Yorkshire Post, about his meeting with an old fellow-laborer in England and leaving a rich host to go home to dinner with him, is only a piece of imagination.

—Mr. Lewis Swift, the Rochester astronomer, who is a hardware merchant in that city, was standing in his shop the other day when several pillars with rafters attached, loaded with iron bars and other pieces of hardware, fell over. A blade of a grain cradle struck his head, inflicting a painful though not dangerous wound. He was standing so that he could see the falling mass coming toward him or he must have been killed.

—"A few years ago," says the Cleveland (Ohio) Leader, "Mr. W. J. Stillman, the American Consul at Crete, married a daughter of the Greek Minister at London. She was a woman of the rarest beauty and accomplishments, and the wealth and rank of her father made her a belle in London society. Her marriage with the American diplomat was regarded by her family as mesalliance, and she was discarded by her father."

—A fourth operation has been performed on the Rev. Dr. W. I. Budington, the pastor of the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church, to remove the cancerous trouble which first began to annoy him last spring. A cancer was cut from the inside of his lower lip first, and then it made its appearance on the outside of the lip, and was a second time cut out. It secured, at first, the shape of a smoker's canoer, but, as Dr. Budington did not smoke, it was decided that it was an ordinary cancer. At first it seemed to have no malignant tendencies; but when Dr. Budington was in London it reappeared, and skilled physicians operated on it again, and a third time it was thought that it would not reappear. Since his return, however, it has again developed on his lip, and has also presented itself in a malignant pustule on the side of the neck. The operations are attended with some pain, but the presence of the cancer is more painful than the operation.—N. Y. Sun.

We Believe

That if everyone would use Hop Bitters freely, there would be much less sickness and misery in the world; and people are fast finding this out, when families begin to use it a trifling cost by its use. We advise all to try it.—U. & L., Rochester, N. Y.

A Woman's Logic.

"It is useless to take medicine. I shall feel better to-morrow morning." I used the above excuse for months, when I felt that I needed a tonic, and people will look more at my bonnet than they will at my face. I will wait till I feel worse and then I'll spend my money for medicine." The new bonnet is purchased and fifty other unnecessaries in the form of ribbons, laces, brooches, etc. Meanwhile the lady's face becomes every day paler and thinner, and her body weaker, until disease has gained so firm a foothold in her system, that the most thorough, and oftimes a long and tedious, course of treatment is necessary to restore her to health. Lassitude, attend to your health before you even think of apparel. A few bottles of Hop Bitters in a plain bonnet is much handsomer and far more attractive to your gentlemen friends, than a pale-worn, diseased face in the most elaborate and elegant bonnet your milliner could devise. Dr. Pierre's Favorite Prescription is everywhere acknowledged to be the standard remedy for female complaints and weaknesses. It is sold by druggists.

CHESTNUTS.

Down in the orchard, all the day,
The apples ripened and dropped away;
Tawny, and yellow, and red they fell,
Filling the air with a spicy smell.

There were purple grapes on the alders low,
But the jays had gathered them long ago,
And the merry children had plundered well
Hedge-nut thicket, and hazel dell.

But the sturdy chestnuts over the hill
Hopped their prickly baskets still,
And laughed in scorn at the wind and rain,
Beating their burly limbs in vain.

"Hush!" said the frost. "If you'll hold your breath
Till hill and valley are still as death
I will whisper a spell that shall open wide
The caskets green where the treasures hide."

The rain sank down, and the wind was still,
And the world was wrapped in the moonlight chill;
And a faint white rain, like a cobweb, was seen
Creeping over the valley green.

Over the roofs of the sleeping town,
Over the hillsides bare and brown;
Field and meadow and wold were crossed
By the shining trail of the silver frost.

Close at the door of each guarded cell
He breathed the spell, and it worked its spell.
And the bristling burrs turned aside—
And every gem fell open wide.

Up sprang the wind with a hoot "Ho! Ho!"
And scattered the treasures to and fro;
And the children shouted, "Come away!
There is sport in the chestnut woods to-day."

LISBETH'S MISSIONARY.

"The butcher's bill, papa!"

Outside, the locusts were piping shrilly among the blue cups of the morning-glory vines; the bland September sunshine steeped everything in yellow brightness. Within, the country parson sat at his desk, with divers and sundry sheets of sermon-paper scattered before him, half a dozen reference books open at his elbow, and his head cleared tightly between his two hands, after a fashion which involved considerable rumpling of his iron-gray hair.

"Eh?" said the parson, letting his head, as it were, out of custody, and coming slowly down from the world of polemics, as he stared at the pretty slender girl in faded calico and washed-out ribbons, who stood beside him with an ominous-looking piece of paper in her hand.

"The butcher's bill, papa," said Polly Fenn; "and he's waiting, please."

"But, my dear"—the parson laid down his pen, and took the bill into his hand with a puzzled air—"we've had no butcher's meat this month. We have strives to be in the last degree economical."

"Yes, I know, papa," said Polly, knitting her pretty brows; "but we ordered three pounds of steak for the District Missionaries dined here, and there was the joint for next day's Sabbath-school Society day, and the evening the Bishop was here—don't you remember?"

"I remember, my child—I remember," said the country parson, with a sigh. "Hospitality is an agreeable virtue enough when one has the means to get that sort of thing done for one, but it costs money, Polly—it costs money. Put down the bill, child, and tell Neighbor Brisket that I will attend to it at my earliest convenience."

Still blue-eyed Polly hesitated. "And the grocer was here this morning, papa, and the account has really mounted up beyond everything. And he says that he hopes you will please to settle at once, and that hereafter he has determined to do business only on a strictly cash basis."

The Rev. Mr. Fenn smiled a sickly smile.

"Then I am afraid, Polly," said he, "that he won't do much business with me. For as long as the vestry are so illatory with their payments—"

"Yes, papa, that's just what I told him," said Polly; "but he says that business is business."

"He is right, my dear," said the parson, "and I am wrong; but it is through no fault of mine. Now run away, and leave me to my books."

Polly Fenn silently withdrew, with her pretty brows still knitted, as if she were utterly hopeless of comprehending the problem of the world's ways. The butcher, white-aproned and burly, stood at the door, a living impersonation of the fate which Polly could neither ignore nor avert.

"Well, miss?" said the butcher.

"Papa will attend to it at his earliest convenience, Mr. Brisket," faltered Polly.

"But his earliest convenience has been such a mortal long time a-coming, miss," grunted Mr. Brisket. "And times is dull, and I've got notes to meet."

"I'm very sorry, Mr. Brisket, but—"

"Tain't no good standin' here," said the butcher, irritably scrubbing his head. "I might as' knowed what answer I should ha' got from Parson's the threshold. But it's hard on a poor man, that's what it is, and them as calls themselves gentry hadn't ought to eat if they can't pay. I'll call again this day week, miss, and then—"

And with this the butcher whisked himself away under the arch of morning-glory vines, where the locusts were singing, and the pink and purple cups swung to and fro in the morning wind.

And Polly, with crimsoned cheeks and heart-beating with vague resentment, turned back into the great sunshiny kitchen, where Lisbeth was swaying nervously to and fro in the splint-bottomed rocker, with a week-old newspaper in her hand, her yellow hair catching the sunbeams like a coronal of gold as she rocked.

"Lisbeth," said the elder sister, austerely, "are the wild grapes ready for preserving?"

"Wild grapes?" repeated Lisbeth, flinging the newspaper into the window-seat; "I haven't thought of them since you went away. Oh, Polly, how I wish we were rich!"

Polly advanced soberly to a flat wicker tray of clustered grapes, full of subtle perfume, and dusted over with pale purple bloom, and began to separate them from their stems with deft, quick fingers.

"Why?" said she.

"I would go to New York and see the new play," said Lisbeth, still swaying back and forth in the splint-bottomed rocker. "Olivia was a country parson's daughter, and so are we. I should like to see my own counterfeit presentment on the stage."

"Nonsense," said Polly. You had a deal better come here and help with these grapes."

"It's such wretched business to be poor!" said Lisbeth. She was a sparkling little creature, after the hummingbird type of damsel, with yellow hair curling low over her forehead, intense azure-brown eyes, and a small red mouth with dimples hovering shyly in its neighborhood. "Just look at us, Polly, you and me, two girls of nineteen and seventeen, that ought to be enjoying ourselves and having a good time, and here we are, washing and scrubbing, and turning wretched rags of dyed silk, and cleaning faded ribbons, and counting every pound of rice and every potato! Even these wild grapes, Polly, that you and I gathered down by the edge of the swamp, we shouldn't venture on the extravagance of preserving them, if Mrs. Deacon Blodgett hadn't offered to supply the sugar on halves. Oh, I do so hate this old Eden Brisket—the butcher thinks he can insult us with impunity."

"Yes," said Polly, thoughtfully, "we mustn't order any more meat at present."

"But we must live," flashed out Lisbeth.

"There is salt mackerel," said Polly, "and eggs, and vegetable soups, and Mrs. Pullett always sends us a bloater or two, and some fresh sausages when they kill their pig. Oh, we shall get along somehow, Lisbeth; anything is better than debt."

Lisbeth looked up with sparkling eyes.

"Polly," cried she, "why don't they increase the missionary fund? Six hundred dollars a year is a shameful pittance for such a man as he is."

Polly shook her head over the grapes. "Papa isn't a young man any longer, Lisbeth," said she, "and he isn't as modern in his ideas as Mr. Crocus."

"Crocus, indeed!" said Lisbeth, sneered out Lisbeth, shaking the yellow mane out of her eyes. "And his sermons—oh, Polly, they make me cry, they are so deep and so dreary, and go down into one's heart as! Six hundred dollars a year, Polly, for such work and study, so that!"

"There is no doubt," said Polly, soberly, "but that clergymen are, as a rule, miserably underpaid in this country."

"I shall never marry a clergyman," cried Lisbeth, with energy. "No, Polly, never! I'd rather be a dust-man first! For dust-men get their pay, and clergymen don't, and—"

Lisbeth stopped short, scarlet and confused, in this rhapsody of hers, for chancing to glance up, she beheld in the doorway a tall and solemn-faced young man, with an umbrella in one hand and a traveling satchel in the other.

"We don't want anything, please," said she, jumping at once to the conclusion that she beheld a book agent, or a vendor of patent polish, or some such itinerant tradesman.

"I beg your pardon," said the gentleman, apparently as much embarrassed as was she herself; "I must have mistaken the house. I was looking for the Reverend Francis Fenn"

"My good gracious! another missionary," murmured Lisbeth sotto voce, as Polly stepped graciously forward, saying:

"You are not mistaken, sir; this is the house. If you will step in the parlor, and I will speak to papa."

The best room of the parsonage was cool and dark, with green paper shades drawn down, a jug of fragrant dried rose leaves in the fire-place, and a home-brushed rug of party-colored rags laid carefully down before the sofa to hide the darned spots in the carpet.

"But that chair, please," said Polly, coloring up to the roots of her hair, as the unwary stranger advanced toward a certain corner; "the leg is broken, and we've glued it, and I'm afraid it's not quite safe. This one is better."

While Lisbeth, hiding her face in her apron, murmured to herself "Is there no end to our humiliations? Is our world always to be full of glue and patches, and mends and make-shifts?"

"Lisbeth," said Polly, returning, "go and call papa."

"It's another missionary. But sure," said Lisbeth, unwillingly pulling down the sleeves of her brown calico dress, "and I know he'll stay to dinner, and he's got a hungry glare in his eyes, and there's nothing for dinner but barley soup and a cabbage. Oh, dear!" with a grimace which made Polly laugh in spite of herself, "I wish the race of missionaries was extinct."

The country parson looked mildly up from the second paragraph of his "Thirdly" as Lisbeth came in, snarling of wild grapes, with an aureole of yellow hair about her face.

"Papa," said she, "there's a gentleman in the parlor to see you, with a carpet-bag and a white neck-tie!"

"Ah!" said the clergyman. "A visitor, I suppose. He is most welcome. But I am just at present deep in the thread of a complicated polemic theory. Make my compliments to the gentleman, Lisbeth, and beg his indulgence for a quarter of an hour or so." And the parson dipped his pen resolutely into the time-stained wooden standish, as if he was determined to settle the subject at once.

"But, papa!" Lisbeth had caught at his coat-cuff to reclaim him, temporarily, from the abysses of theological argument.

"Yes, my dear," looking absently at her.

"Do you think he'll stay to dinner?"

"I shall invite him, my dear, most assuredly."

Lisbeth's countenance fell. "But, papa," faltered she, "there's nothing but barley-soup."

"We will serve it with the good old-fashioned grace of welcome, my dear," said the Reverend Mr. Fenn, with a grave, sweet smile, "and I doubt not it will suffice."

Lisbeth flounced out of the room with heightened color and quick, impatient breath. "Papa's an angel," said she, to herself; "but angels never were adapted to get along in this work-a-day world." She put her golden head into the parlor-door for a moment. "Papa is very busy with his 'Thirdly,'" said she, with a roguish twinkle in the deep blue eyes, "and he begs you'll be good enough to wait until he's through."

The stranger bowed, and looked more embarrassed than ever, as he answered, "Oh, certainly, certainly. I am in no haste whatever."

And Lisbeth went back to her sister. "Polly," said she, "what shall we do? Company to dinner, and nothing to give them?"

"But we must have something," said Polly. "Put on your things, Lisbeth. Go out and buy a fowl, and a quart of potatoes, and a loaf of bread. And stop at Mr. Dakin's for an ounce of his best tea and a quarter of a pound of butter."

Lisbeth opened her eyes very wide at this extravagant order.

"Oh, you reckless Polly!" said she; "and where are all the funds to come from?"

Polly sighed softly. "I shall have to take the dried-cherry money," said she, "that I was saving up for my fall hat and gloves. But it isn't much matter. I dare say I can manage very well with the old one for a little while longer."

"It's a shame!" cried Lisbeth, vehemently. "And to think how you toiled all those hot summer days to pick and dry those black cherries!"

"There's no help for it, dear," said Polly, gently. "Get your hat on quick and be a good time to Mr. Dakin's."

"But it isn't fair," protested Lisbeth. "Why should all the traveling preachers and book agents and mission solicitors come to us and eat us out of house and home? Why don't they go to Mr. Crocus?"

Polly smiled. "Because Mr. Crocus doesn't make them welcome, and papa does," said she.

"I do wonder," cried Lisbeth, impetuously, "if there is any other race of men imposed upon as country ministers are? Mark my words, Polly, I never, never, will marry one!"

But by this time Polly had tied on her sister's straw hat, and twisted a manin scarf around her drooped shoulders.

The Worshipful Master-elect has not yet made known his appointments of other officers.

The Lodge have appointed a Committee to lease Fox's Hall for a term of years, and will fit it up as a Lodge room.

—The following are the new officers of Petoskey Lodge:

W. M.—James Buckley.
S. W.—Lewis C. Watson.
J. W.—I. A. C. Rowan.
Treasurer—Hiram O. Rose.
Secretary—Abner S. Lee.
S. D.—J. S. Coffman.
J. D.—Edward H. Kinney
Stewards—John Shier, A. McCarty.
Tiler—Loveless Blayney.

The Traverse Bay Eagle has turned weather prophet and predicts one hundred days of sleighing between now and May 1st. The Jackson Citizen has a prophet who says that we will have the warmest winter ever known.

The old, old story: A Vermontville man stole his firewood until the person from whom he stole it put a charge of powder in a knotty stick, and the Vermontville man's stove is now sadly shattered.

The geographical center of the lower peninsula of this State is upon section 34, in the township of Coe, in Isabella county about 18 miles distant respectively from the villages of St. Louis and Alma, in Gratiot county.

The Cheboygan Tribune says that a combination of capitalists has been formed to obtain control of the lands of the Marquette and Mackinaw Railroad by influencing legislation adverse to the railroad, and thus secure the return of the land grant to the State and to the market.

Political and General.

Cincinnati paper gives Grant 188 Southern votes in the National Republican Convention.

Even in Canada a greenback is as good as local coin.

U. S. Grant received one vote for Congress in Blackburn's Seventh Kentucky District, but will not contest the seat.

The Troy Times is glad to know that the Republican candidate will not need the vote of any Southern State two years hence in order to be elected.

Angell, the defaulting Pullman defaulter had to dodge 15,000 of his photographs which were sent flying through the world.

Governor Thayer of Wyoming, having toured the West, prophesies Grant's nomination in 1880, he being the first choice everywhere.

There have been but few changes in the personal or political complexion of the Forty-fifth Congress since its adjournment last summer.

The House now stands Republican 135, Democrats 157, National 1. The Senate is unchanged, consisting Republicans 39, Democrats 36, Independent 1.

The St. Louis Democrat is sure that Mr. Tilden would be whipped by Gen. Grant just as c-o-e-asy!

The Democratic weeklies of the State are commencing to court the Greenback damsel with the view to an early alliance.

It is said that the high-toned gentlemen of the South will undertake to cheat the country into allotting her a number of Representatives in Congress to which she will not be entitled, by fraudulent census taking.

Monday, Senators Voorhees and Beck introduced propositions to make the trade dollars a legal tender and recoin them into standard dollars. Tuesday, Senator Paddock offset this by introducing a bill to make the trade dollars legal tender, and recoin the standard dollars and trade dollars.

The trade balance in favor of the United States for the last ten months is over two hundred and eighty millions of dollars. We have sold abroad so much more than we have bought abroad.

The Democratic Philadelphia Times speaks of Grant as "one of the most honored private citizens of the country whose greenest garlands he justly wears."

Senator Blaine introduced a resolution on Monday to have the Senate in quire into the Southern election frauds. This will open the whole subject for debate; when Mr. Blaine will probably make things as lively and interesting in the Senate as he used to in the House.

Once before British troops invaded Afghanistan, but with a most disastrous result. In 1841 they crossed the frontier and moved on toward Cabul with great confidence of reaching that city. But when they reached the mountain region, every rock and crag and tree had armed Afghans behind it, and the heights bristled with artillery. The fire terrific and deadly, and the defenseless invaders were driven back pell-mell with great loss. The repulse was complete, and the undertaking was ingloriously abandoned. It remains to be seen whether the result of the present invasion will be a repetition of that history.

The New York Sun has been inquiring into the condition of the Advocate —W. H. Shupe's greenback paper—which had an enormous circulation before the election, in consequence of its being offered below cost and the "Nationals" everywhere aiding to circulate it. The Sun intimates that the paper is dead, and it does not believe it will ever go on again; but Mr. Shupe, in an interview, said it would start up again as soon as he could get things fixed. The Sun avers that the paper has lost 500 000 subscribers since election. Mr. Shube says it lost 300,000. Shupe said he expected to raise $50,000 and then he could go ahead again. Peter Cooper, being interviewed, said Shupe owes him $3,000 for money lent. Niel McCallum & Co., say of the sewing machines which the Advocate advertised it would furnish, that Shupe never bought but 325 machines; and they complain that their business has been injured by people writing to them about their machine, asking: "Is this the same fraud that was advertised in the Advocate?" This firm says: "They complain to us that they have sent their money to the Advocate for machines and never got them. Generally, where they write over and over again to the Advocate they get no answer; and, when they do, receive only excuses and promises, which there is no sign of keeping." The Sun adds that it receives letters complaining that "money has been sent to the Advocate office for papers, sewing machines, and other things that have not been supplied, and that the persons sending for them have been unable to get their money returned or even to obtain any reply to their letters of inquiry." Complaint of this kind is abundant enough in this State; but Shupe's victims in Michigan cannot complain that they were not duly and repeatedly warned in the matter when subscriptions for the Advocate were being solicited.

DETROIT
Post & Tribune.

The Metropolitan Republican Journal of Michigan.

The publishers of the Detroit Post and Tribune point to the record of journalistic enterprise and political usefulness made in the first year of the existence of the consolidated newspaper as the satisfactory evidence of the excellence of its claim upon the public confidence and support. The paper will continue to be the sincere, vigilant, and able advocate of the Republican political doctrines, of honest and rational financial and fiscal policy, and of State development.

In large resources, its ample facilities in news gathering, its wide circulation, and its position as the metropolitan organ of the dominant party in the state enable its publishers to supplement promise by performance, and to fully meet the expectations of its patrons.

The news department of the Post and Tribune will be kept fresh, accurate and complete; the paper has control of the largest facilities of getting intelligence, foreign, domestic, state and local, and special correspondents at important points in Michigan, and at the state centers of news elsewhere.

Its compilations of State and its commercial reports are well known for fulness and reliability.

Its editorial page discusses current issues candidly, and from the standpoints of accurate information, and of an adherence to correct political and economic principles. All matters of special public interest will receive from it the same intelligent and painstaking investigation which it has given this year the important phases of the currency question.

Its columns will be rich in miscellaneous reading matter, including sketches, poems, and selections from the current literature of the day. Special care will be taken to keep the paper pure and elevated in tone.

One year at the Post and Tribune is devoted to matter prepared for the rural community, containing discussions of questions of interest in practical agriculture, letters on farm and home topics, recipes, etc.

New features will be added to the paper during 1879, and neither pains nor expense will be spared in keeping the Post and Tribune a

First-Class Family Paper.

Strong in all its departments, and in every way worthy of the great State with whose history and growth it has been so long and closely identified.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made by James A. Cameron to George Bethune, dated April 30th, A. D. 1875, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 15th day of May, A. D. 1875, in Liber One of Mortgages, on page 297, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Five Hundred and Eighty Dollars and fifty-three cents, and an attorney's fee of fifty dollars provided for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law having been taken or instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof:

Now, Therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 8th day of March, A. D. 1879, at one o'clock in the afternoon I shall sell at Public Auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the court house, in the village of Charlevoix, that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix county is holden, the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with fifty per cent. rate, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifty dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that certain lot, piece and parcel of land situate in the village of Charlevoix, in the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, and known and described as follows: Lot Five (5) of Block Eight (8) of the village of Charlevoix, according to the recorded plat of the said village of Charlevoix.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Charlevoix ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the Co. of Charlevoix, held at the Probate Office, in the Village of Charlevoix, on Monday the twenty-eighth day of October, A. D. 1878. Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of John Tayjawkwaybay of Charlevoix Co. deceased. On reading and filing the petition duly verified of Theresa Tayjawkwaybay praying for the appointment of an Administrator of said estate.

Therefore it is ordered, that Wednesday the 29th day of December, A. D. 1878, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause if any there be why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted: And it is further ordered, that said petitioner Theresa Tayjawkwaybay, give notice to the persons interested in said Estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper circulated in said county of Charlevoix, four successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

THE RESORT.

Meeting of the Subscribers to the Grand Resort of the Committee.

—List of Subscribers.

At a meeting of the subscribers to the Charlevoix Summer Resort Fund, the following list was transacted:

E. H. Green was elected chairman, and J. Milo Eaton secretary.

The report of the Committee on Subscriptions was read, and, and on motion, was accepted and adopted, and the committee discharged.

On motion the Secretary was instructed to have said report published in the Charlevoix SENTINEL.

On motion, a vote of thanks was tendered the Committee for the faithful and efficient manner in which they had performed their duties.

On motion, the Secretary was instructed to have a copy of the minutes of this meetings published in the SENTINEL.

On motion the Secretary was instructed to retain the original report, with receipts in his hands for inspection.

On motion, the meeting adjourned.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

To the Subscribers to the Charlevoix Summer Resort Fund:

Your Committee, which was appointed by the purpose of collecting subscriptions, selecting location, and purchasing the same, and for performing such other duties as were necessary for the establishing of a Summer Resort at this place, would respectfully submit the following report:

On the 6th day of June, 1878, a contract was entered into between your committee and M. J. Stockman, for the purchase of 25 acres of land on section 26—34—6, for the sum of $625, to be paid as the following manner: $200 cash; $100 in thirty days from that date; and the balance in ninety days from date.

At the same time a bond for a deed was executed by M. J. Stockman to the Charlevoix Summer Resort Association, agreeing to convey the said land to the said Association, and conditioned for the expenditure of $1000 in improvements by them within two years from that date, according to the instructions given to your committee. The land above described was at once taken possession of by the Association above named, and improvements to the amount of about $1000 were made previous to the 1st of October, 1878. All or about that time, they being desirous of having a deed to said land, and your committee being satisfied that they had performed the conditions prescribed in the bond for a deed, a warranty deed was executed by Mr. Stockman to the Association.

The following is a list of the moneys subscribed for this fund, and collected by your committee and paid to M. J. Stockman, as the receipts hereunto attached show. Your committee desire to express their thanks to the contributors, one and all, for the promptness and cheerfulness with which they have met their obligations, thereby materially lightening the labors of the committee.

MONEY TO LOAN on good real estate security, by A. A. Bleazby, Attorney at Law, Kalkaska, Mich. 16-1yr

Last week a steamer passed Detroit on its way to Buffalo, having on board seventy-four barrels of silver ore from the Silver Islet mine. The ore was reported to be worth $136,000, one barrel alone containing 640 pounds, being valued at $6,000. This is said to be the richest "packing" ore ever obtained from a mine, being an average of over $9 to the pound.

Plunging Over the Falls.

An illustration of the fact that the resistless rapids and mighty waterfalls do not destroy all life drawn into their terrible power was witnessed by the Sun correspondent on Saturday last, in company with Mr. Joseph S. Vick and wife, of Rochester, and two ladies from Brooklyn. Luckily, the rapacious guardians of Nature's great water works were not aware of the extra exhibition, or doubtless a heavy fee would have been demanded.

After viewing the Canada Fall from the point near which Terrapin Tower once stood, we were about to ascend the bank on Goat Island, when one of the ladies discovered what she called three large birds close to the water's edge, under the shadow of the bank, about 500 feet above the brink of the fall. An examination through a field glass showed the birds to be large, large geese. Two were white, and the other was gray. They stood quietly gazing into the turbulent rapids, occasionally stretching their necks and dropping their heads.

On the attention of our hack driver being called to the geese, he said that they had fallen asleep on the river above the rapids, and, floating down, had been awakened by the tossing of the water and roaring of the falls, in time to effect a landing. "They are so terrified," he continued, "that anyone could catch them now."

"Why not try and capture one for your Sunday dinner?" suggested the correspondent.

"Guess I will," replied the hackman, as he started off up the bank.

He last crept up to within about six feet of the geese when from a white one walked slowly into the stream. The hackman stood still a second or so before taking another step through the bushes. As he raised his right foot, which was nearest the river, to proceed, the grey goose craned his neck and followed the white one. Before the hackman could take three more steps, the last one was a goose. Slowly it paddled its way after the others out into the fatal rapids.

One of the Brooklyn ladies, placing her hands over her eyes, exclaimed, "Oh! the poor things; they will be drawn over the falls and killed. I can't look at them."

But the fascination could not be resisted. The lady, like the rest of us, watched the geese with intense interest on their perilous voyage.

At first the geese stemmed the current with apparently little difficulty; but as the rock stopped the edge of the river they worked further out into the rapids. They were soon caught on hillocks of water and spray, and turned helplessly around. Then, getting into smoother water, they endeavored in vain to stay their downward course. The geese made no effort to fly, the water frequently sucking them down until only their long necks were visible above the surface.

She was found alive on the island a short distance below the falls, but she soon died.—Niagara Falls Cor. N. Y. Sun.

Civilizing the Red Men.

An interesting document was yesterday received at military headquarters from Gen. Miles in reference to the condition of the Cheyenne Indians at Fort Keogh, M. T. Gen. Miles states that about a year ago he was allowed to retain thirty Indian scouts and their families, but that since then this number has been reduced to twenty; these included twenty-nine men, forty-four women and thirty-nine children. To these he calls special attention. The general states that twenty-seven months ago these Indians were leaders in the Battle of the Little Big Horn. They were fought by the troops in the winter of 1876-77. On March 23, 1877, seven of them surrendered at Fort Keogh as hostages. Then followed the surrender of 1,000 on April 22, and the remainder (of "Crazy Horse's" band) removed south and surrendered at their agencies. Their war ponies were sold for $2,450.25. With half this money Capt. Ewers purchased a very fine herd of eighty-five young cows and heifers at about $10 a head, and $400 worth of seeds for planting. The cattle were branded and distributed among the families. The ground for the garden was broken up late in the season, yet they have raised 1,000 bushels of potatoes, 150 of turnips, 30 of corn, 15 of onions, 18 of parsnips, 10 of carrots, 1,000 melons, 1,000 head of cabbage, 4,000 summer squash, 500 Hubbard, 300 pumpkins and 300 dozen of cucumbers. Beside these, they raised a large quantity of beans, peas, radishes and tomatoes. Their winter crop has been stored in two large root-houses, built by the Indians themselves. The General says that the head-warriors of the Oglalah-Sioux and Cheyennes could have been seen gathering their crops, and lifting logs with which to secure them for the winter. This work has been done under the supervision of one soldier, George Youkam, a plain, honest Illinois farmer-boy, who came out as a recruit in the spring.

These Indians have solved three problems: First, that the wildest of them can be made peaceable and loyal. Second, that they can be made self-sustaining, as these men received nothing from the Government that they have not earned, and have supported themselves by their own industry. Third, that the representations that have been made about "barren lands," and which have done so much harm, have been made without foundation; and that, in addition to the pastoral and mineral wealth of this country, it is rich in agricultural resources.

Gen. Miles adds that what can be done with these Indians can be done with all the Indians of the Northwest, and at one-tenth what it is now costing the Government, and without any additional legislation on the subject. The only money these Indians have received from the Government was a small amount they had been paid as enlisted scouts. In this connection, the General says that he wishes to speak of the Indians' services. One of them was killed while conveying dispatches, four were bodily wounded in the engagements with the Sioux and Nez Perces. They have discovered and guided the command to two hostile camps, they have carried dispatches in every direction, and at great distances, and, as guides, have been invaluable, as their knowledge of the country, timber, water and old Indian routes of travel, etc., has aided the troops in establishing direct freight, mail and telegraph lines of communication. Gen. Miles recommends that the $1,224 he holds, received from the sales of pelts of Indians who were sent south, be sent to some other who will make a judicious use of it for their benefit.

Gen. Terry forwarded this report to Gen. Sheridan, and called especial attention to the report as being a valuable one, and added that "the remarkable success which is reported indicates not only an unexpected capacity for improvement on the part of these Indians, but very wise and skillful administration on the part of Col. Miles." And Gen. Sheridan's indorsement is that "this is a confirmation of the belief, as expressed in my annual report, that with kind treatment, administered with steadiness and justice, the Indian can be redeemed and made self-supporting, and in an incredibly short period of time as compared with the opinion usually entertained by the general public."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The Turkish Slave Code.

The Turkish slave code recognizes no fewer than six gradations of slavery, which differ widely and importantly from each other, and form so many steps from absolute bondage to freedom. Of these the first is that of kenditik or unconditional servitude, in which the slave is the mere chattel of the master, with no legal rights of any kind except to protection from personal abuse. But the condition even of this class has little or nothing in common with that of the West Indian or American negro. The law absolutely protects their life, and, as I have said, forbids undue severity or punishment; beside which, they are as a rule kindly treated, and except in the case of slaves born such or purchased in infancy, are entitled to their liberty after nine years' service. The second category is that of the mazzoom, which consists of slaves who are permitted by their masters to work or trade on their own account. These may acquire property, and even themselves own slaves, and at their death may devise by their estate as they please, their children, too, being mazzoom, like themselves. The third class consists of mukatebs, or slaves who have received a contract (bitabe) stipulating that emancipation shall take place in the event of some specified condition being fulfilled; such as the payment of an agreed sum of money or the performance of a particular service. During the term over which these contracts extend their holders can neither be sold nor hired out, and may also purchase slaves of their own, to whom they may grant similar privileges to those enjoyed by themselves. But if the condition be not fulfilled within the term the slave lapses into the state of kenditik. The fourth grade is that of mutcherra, or slaves who have received a deed (tebbir) which confers on them deferred freedom, to take effect on the death of the master, such death being from a pilgrimage or other future event. The slave thus gifted may be sold, but the sale carries with it the irrevocable condition, and in no way bars his right to liberty the moment the specified event happens. The fifth class, called mutabbermukiateb, combines the double advantages of the third and fourth. The sixth—umm-el-weled, "mothers of children"—consists entirely of female slaves whose children have either been acknowledged or adopted by their owner, and thus become free; they pass at once into the class of mutchers, and, while they cannot in the meantime be sold, attain their full liberty on the master's decease if not enfranchised before it. The fact that a large proportion of the female slave population belongs to this class may argue more for Ottoman benevolence than morality, but it is at least conclusive as to the many privileges and the general kindliness of the treatment which Turkish—as contrasted with Cuban and Brazilian—bonds-women enjoy.—Traders' Magazine.

An Afghan Superstition.

The English soldiers just now campaigning near the frontier of the Ameer, about to overrun the dominions, may this week have the opportunity of witnessing a remarkable festival that occurs at three distinct epochs under the full moon of November. Dr. Leitner, who acted as interpreter for the British officers during the Cabul War, and afterward explored Northern India, gave me an account of this festival, which consists in the people scattering lighted torches in the direction of the moon called Ghilji. They thus celebrate a legend that a Cannibal King once ruled over that region, who kept his kitchen supplied with the children of his subjects. This King bore a charmed life, and all attempts to destroy him failed until heavenly beings took pity on them, and one of their number became incarnate on earth for the purpose of delivering them. The incarnate deity was assisted by the daughter of the tyrant, who discovered the secret of his charmed life, which was that he had only a heart of flesh. The tyrant's heart was made of snow. Consequently the incarnate burned the puppies with torches; with no other weapons, they surrounded the castle and the icy heart perished amidst that circle of warmth. The incarnate and the fair maid who found out the secret of the tyrant's heart—she is now a Madonna—reigned together over the realm they had made happy for a long time, and their story is now told in torches. What I have seen of British officers and soldiers does not lead me to hope that they will ever be converted to this Oriental torch gospel. Yet they might well do so.—London Cor. Baltimore Gazette.

Terrible Contest with a Lunatic.

The details of the suicide of William Rawson, son of Horace Rawson, of Craftsbury, show that there was a narrow escape from a far bloodier tragedy. William came home at midnight, and, with abusive and profane language, said to his father, "One of us has got to die." He then sprang upon his father and mother, and a struggle ensued between them. The mother was in her chamber overhead, and heard his language, came to the room and found them in a struggle upon the floor. They both did all they could to assist the father to gain advantage over his infuriated son, and this done, the sister ran out for help from neighbors. Mr. Rawson could not hold his son down, but got away from him and stepped into his room and Mrs. Rawson into the front hall. Then William went to another room and returned with a gun, which he had previously loaded with a heavy charge of shot, and called for his sister. Then came a fearful struggle between him and his mother, while he tried to open the hall door, but she held the door with desperate strength until he wrenched off the door-knob on his side, when he went up the back stairs to his mother's room and burst open the door. Not finding his mother, he came down the front stairs. Meanwhile Mrs. Rawson sought refuge in a closet, where she thought she could secure the door against him. Mr. Rawson started out for help, and the son, seeing him, called to know where he was going, but received no reply, when William, thinking all had gone, placed the gun to his ear and discharged the contents through his head, the shot coming out of the top of his head and lodging in the floor above. He lived several hours, remained totally unconscious to the last. There had been nothing but good feeling between father and son. He had been home that day, and after supper assisted his father about the milking and other work about the barn, and seemed as usual, except he laughed a great deal. He was thirty-one years of age, and had never been profane or rough, but had for years had times of being gloomy, and was undoubtedly insane.—Barton (Vt.) Monitor.

A United States Judge on the Jury System.

It requires all the veneration which age inspires for this mode (trial by jury) of dispensing justice, and all that eminent men have said of its value in England, to prevent our natural reason from revolting against the system, and especially some of its incidents. If a cultivated Oriental were told for the first time that a Nation, which claims to be in advance of all others in its love of justice and its methods of enforcing it, required as one of its fundamental principles of jurisprudence that every controversy between individuals, and every charge of crime against an offender, should be submitted to a body of men without learning in the law, often without any other learning, and that neither party to the contest could prevail until all the twelve men were of one opinion in his favor, he would certainly be amazed at the proposition. Nor have the European Nations differed much with him in their estimate of the jury. It has been well understood and received the cardinal consideration of continental jurists for a great many years, without being adopted by them, that in the form that we have it from England. Many attempts have been made to introduce it in some of the States, but I am not prepared to say that it has not in its essential Anglo-Saxon feature met the approval of any people not descended from the race. In the days when Kings exercised arbitrary power, the jury was among the most subtle of the devices of English genius, a valuable barrier against oppression by the Crown. But in this country, where the people are sovereign, the jury is but too often the mere reflection of popular impulse, and the safety of an innocent man is more frequently found to rest upon the firmness of the twelfth than the impartiality of the jury. Still, it is probably wise that no man shall be convicted of an infamous crime until twelve fair-minded men who can command the confidence of both parties to the controversy shall have agreed upon his guilt. I am also forced to admit, however, that even in civil cases my experience as a judge leads me much more favorable to jury trials than it was as a practitioner. And I am bound to say that an intelligent and unprejudiced jury, when such can be obtained, who are instructed in the law with such clearness, precision and brevity as will present their duty in bold, are rarely mistaken in regard to facts which they are called upon to find.—Justice Miller, before the New York State Bar Association.

A Race With the Flames.

THE Yankton Press tells of a lively race the General and L. A. Carney had with the recent prairie fire. Traveling upon an unburned strip, they came upon a settler in the line of fire. He attended miles northwest and southwest, and was staging slowly northward, when they were within twenty rods of this line the wind suddenly increased and shifted some 20 deg. toward them and from the west, sweeping the flames directly upon them. What was five minutes before a harmless fire, to be crossed with ordinary care, was now a mass of ravenous flame, often ten or fifteen feet high, and sometimes twenty feet across. It roared like half a dozen passenger trains at full speed. They sprang from the wagon and flred the grass, but it made very slow progress and had not burned ten feet square when a whirlwind swept down the line with a high gale. Their only chance was flight, and they sprang into the wagon and whipped up their Texas horses for a race northward to some higher stony ground. The ponies understood that game and went readily. It was all done in less time than the telling. The very cause of danger was at last the means of safety. The whirlwind, which was twenty rods wide, passed by. It had changed all the adjacent currents of wind. This had weakened the wind behind and prevented the fire from spreading, and now that it had passed it gave a chance to cross in its rear upon the ground where the grass was thin, and within ten minutes of the first apprehension of danger they were among the smoking cinders on burned ground. The whirlwind went over the bluff and down the river bottom, filling it with fire in places above the level of the bluffs, and sending up a column of black smoke which must have been over half a mile in length.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—An English journalist died recently from the effects of slipping on a bit of peel, and falling on the pavement. He hurt his knee and erysipelas set in.

—Fifteen years ago the wife of Mr. Chapel, of Charlottetown, P. E. I., got a divorce from him, with alimony of £30 a year. Rather than pay this he went to jail, and there remained till his death, a few days ago.

—Mr. Guy Carlton, a robust farmer, seventy-five years old, living near the Village of Wyoming, N. Y., has bought his coffin and has it ready for use. He also has ready for erection a solid marble block, chiselled in the shape of a dwelling, with doors and windows. The block will be put over his grave to symbolize by its form and solidity the last long dwelling of man.

—A drunkard in Sacramento, warned by a touch of delirium tremens that he had carried his drinking to the utter limit, resolved to reform or die. He declared his purpose to several friends, locked himself in his room, sawed himself in an easy chair and put a loaded pistol on the table, within reach. The craving for alcohol grew stronger and stronger, and at last, unable to resist his thirst, he shot himself through the brain.

—Mrs. Smith, of this city, found a fishhook among her husband's papers and determined to destroy it. So she resolved to burn the fishhook up, and for this purpose cast it into the fire. The next morning Mr. Smith in digging out the "clinkers" found the fishhook in the ball of his thumb. After the surgeon had removed it, he put it into his vest pocket, with an idea of showing it to his acquaintances. He sauntered down street, when an ambitious colored woman swept by him and was suddenly brought to with "a round turn." The hook had worked its way partly out of the pocket, and its point caught in the bodice of her dress. The situation grew momentarily interesting to the bad boys who infest the thoroughfare, and they hailed Smith's efforts to liberate himself from aberian custody with hoots of delight. Finally the dusky female swung clear and went whirling down the street. A policeman attempted her arrest, but was arrested himself by a fishhook in the hollow of his hand. The hook is now in the pig-bank, awaiting to have something done with it. Any person desiring a permanent situation to take care of a fishhook should make immediate application to the proper authorities.—New London (Conn.) Telegram.

Watching a Millionaire's Grave.

Beginning last night (the day of the funeral), a watch will be kept on the grave of Jay Gould, Cincinnati Reporters to thwart any attempts like that made by grave-robbers. Two men will watch by night and two by day, the orders of Mr. Gould having been that the night shall not cease for two years. To the tombstone will be attached a key to a watch, locked in a case that the men will carry. This watch must have the key at the grave inserted into it every mid night, and will be inspected twice a day, to see that it has been carried to the grave at frequent intervals. Five years ago, when Mr. Powers' son Henry died, father and son were by his side, a similar vigil was kept. One day Mr. Powers saw one of the watchmen on the point of neglecting the indicator. He drove at once to the works, at Ninth and Parish, when he met a trustworthy servant of the firm. "Mike," he said, "here are $20—buy a nice, warm coat and go to Henry's grave to-night —I saw one of the watchmen drunk to-day." At nine o'clock Mr. Powers himself drove out, bringing a lunch and water-proof to the substitute watchman, who stayed there for many nights thereafter.

It is understood "in circles well advised" that the will left by Mr. Powers contains no public bequests of any importance. "Mr. Powers was a giver in his life-time."—Philadelphia Times.

At the late State election, John Simmonson, who is now in his 115th year, cast his vote as usual. Mr. Simmonson is said to own and farm every election contest since the formation of the Government, commencing with Washington. For whom he tells he gave twenty-five votes. He says that the best day's work he ever put in—on one side, you know; his is about his average, but has some of their play leads him to divide them up among the different candidates. [We don't know to certain how old Mr. Simmonson is; in fact, don't know Mr. Simmonson. All the papers are telling stories of voting centenarians, and we wanted to be in fashion.]—Boston Transcript.

—At Kansas City, a few days ago, fire broke out in a shanty near the Union Elevator, occupied by Bello Greene, a colored woman, and her two children, aged respectively four years and eighteen months. The mother was absent from house, and the children were left in bed. The fire burned rapidly, and screams were heard in the building, but desperate attempts to save the children were unavailing. After the fire the charred remains were drawn forth, and presented a sickening sight.

Management of Manure.

Winter being the season during which the stock is kept up in barns, yards or sheds, it is then that the bulk of the manure is made. The quantity and quality of it depends very much upon the manner in which it is managed. The severe cold and the abundant rains of the winter operates disadvantageously in regard to the needed decomposition of the manure, that is as it is usually managed; but there is a way of handling it by which these disadvantages may be overcome, if not actually turned to account for good. Manure is usually thrown out of the stables into irregular heaps, which are exposed to the rain and snow, and are trampled upon by cattle. Thus it becomes either a sodden mass or is frozen solid, and it so remains until spring, when it is needed for use. This is the worst possible method of using it. The soluble portions are washed out of it, or are locked up in it in a condition in which they cannot be brought into a state of usefulness. The best method of keeping it is, on the contrary, one by which it may be kept in a sufficient condition of moistnre for the most rapid decomposition, but no more than that, and in such a shape or position that it cannot be trampled upon or drawn upon, so as to stop the process of fermentation. The chief trouble is to prevent the manure from freezing. If it is kept in a state of constant heat, the water which will fall upon it will never exceed the amount that is required to make up the loss from evaporation, and to prevent too much dryness, and consequent "fire fanging" or dry rot, by which the quality will be seriously impaired. The method followed by the best farmers is as follows: At this time, when the contents of the yards are in a good condition, must enough from the rains, and partly rotted, they are gathered into a square heap, built up evenly at the sides and slightly hollowing at the top. One end, or each end, as additions may call for it, is left broken down and sloping, so that when the fresh manure as it is taken from the stables is thrown onto the ends of the heap, and the heap begins to ferment and heat from contact with the already fermenting mass of the heap itself. Or if the cold is severe, and the ends of the heap are frozen on the surface, this is broken up, the frozen portions are thrown onto the top of the heap and the fresh manure is thrown directly against the warm interior parts of the heap. The manure from cowstables, sheep-pens, horse-stables and poultry-houses should be mixed together as new additions are made; and the quicker the decomposition these secured help to bring the colder portions into a state of decomposition more easily and more rapidly than if kept by themselves.

When the heap becomes too large for convenient handling in the yard, it may be drawn out to the field where it is to be used. It may be a question if it would not be best to spread it directly upon the surface instead of making a second heap of it. In our own practice we have done both, and incline to the belief that the former is the better way.—N. Y. Times.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—An equal quantity of fresh spirits of vitriol and lemon juice will take stains out of marble. Put in a bottle and shake up well; wet the spots with the mixture, and in a few minutes rub with a soft linen cloth till they disappear.

—In performing housework the hands are frequently put into both hot and cold water. To prevent unpleasant effects upon the skin, use a few drops of glycerine frequently in wiping the hands, and it will restore the soft natural texure of the skin.

—Brass cooking pans should be cleansed inside with brick and vinegar, then rinsed thoroughly, dried at the fire and wiped with a clean cloth. White enamelled pans require only a little soda and warm water to keep them clean and free from grease.

—During the winter men are sometimes troublesome guests in the apiary, especially if the hives are surrounded by straw in which they can harbor. The best preventive is to have the hives so tight that they can gain no admittance. For the sake of ventilation it is not well, however, to have the entrance of the hives that may be in the cellar, or that may be buried in the ground, of such a size as to admit air; and over the entrance of hives that are covered with straw, as mentioned, to make fasten a piece of tin about a quarter of an inch above the bottom board, so that the bees can just pass under the edge of it, while the mice are excluded.—Rural New Yorker.

—A cheap lot of manure may be made of an old carcass of a horse or cow, etc., which are often drawn away to the woods to pollute the atmosphere. Do not do this, but put down four or five loads of muck or soil, roll the carcass on it and sprinkle it over with quicklime, covering over immediately with soil or mould sufficient to make, with that already beneath, twenty good-sized wagon-loads, and you will have seventy-five dollars' worth of the best of fertilizers in less than a year, and no fears need be felt in applying to any crop. One beauty of this plan is, the animals need not be moved far away, there being not the least stench. All animals which you are unfortunate enough to lose can be utilized in this way and be made to go a great way toward replacing them. Smaller animals, such as sheep, calves, dogs and cats can be treated in the same manner with about the average amount of soil and proportionate to their size. When possible, place three or four in one pile, as the labor of covering would be proportionately less; but if is not much work to make a heap of any animal, however small or large.—Turf, Field and Farm.

Ladies, Delicate and Feeble.

Those languid, tiresome sensations, causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet, the constant drain that is taking from your system all its force, energy and vitality, can be stopped from your checks that continued strain upon the vital forces, and your system restored to health, can easily be removed by the use of that unsurpassed remedy, Hop Bitters. Sallow skins and complexions of your system are relieved at once, while the general result of a healthful state is permanently restored. Will you heed this? See "Hop."

Stop Drinking Vinegar.

How many young women who have inherited a consumptive tendency have ruined their health by drinking vinegar to reduce their forms or prevent proportions. Allan's Anti-Fat is absolutely harmless, it promotes digestion, and accomplishes its work simply by preventing an undue assimilation of the fatty ingredients of the food. Excessive fatness is a vexatious burden, and there is no longer an excuse for enduring it, since Allan's Anti-Fat is an effectual remedy for this abnormal condition.

Gentlemen:—Having used three bottles of your Allan's Anti-Fat, I have reduced three pounds while taking one bottle of Allan's Anti-Fat. Yours truly, MRS. M. B. MYERS.

Mrs. William Lawrence, writing to Mr. Fellows, says: I cannot take too much praise for what you have called to inquiries if it really had been as ill as reported, and if it was the Syrup alone we took so wonderfully restored me to health (comparative) to such good health. With gladness I can say that the Hypophosphites Syrup of Hypophosphites, with the blending of Wild Cherry, etc., as combined by Fellows' Hypophosphites being peculiar in its effect and composition, no other preparation is a substitute for it.

Dr. Earle's Testimonial.
For several months past I have used Fellows' Compound Syrup Hypophosphites in the treatment of inoipient phthisis, chronic bronchitis, and other affections of the chest, and I have no hesitation in stating that it ranks foremost amongst the remedies used in those diseases.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH.
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, DEC. 17, - - 1878

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Dec. 12, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

The recent experience of this ill-starred section of country over which the weather clerk seems to have turned on the celestial faucet, and then gone off on a two-day vacation, suggest to me a few remarks on the subject of that institution whose destinies are swayed by the weather clerk's vicar general in America, Gen. Myers, and which is commonly known as the Weather Bureau.

An Englishman on his native heath is never without an umbrella. 'You never know, you know," what trick an innocent looking sky will play you there in its fickleness. But an American rebels at the thought of being chained to an umbrella. In the rush with which he always conducts his business, this alapaca nuisance is invariably in the way of arms or legs, while the mental anxiety generated by the attempt to remember where the article last been left, as he appears empty handed at home, is enough to drive his religious training into a corner where it will not interfere with a few left-handed remarks. If it really rains, he accepts his umbrella as an uncomfortable accompaniment to his overshoes, for no Yankee has yet got ahead of nature to the extent of inventing a patent cloud dodger or to make it rain the other way by the carrying of the wobbling appendage all day with no signs of moisture after the first half hour in the morning, that brings about the lamentable state of profanity hinted up.

Nowadays the several morning papers publish "probabilities" as to the state of the weather, and umbrella carrying has been reduced to a system. For this thanks are due to our Signal Service. The practical working of this organization is under government control, and is familiar to few outside of those immediately interested. With a central office at Washington, there are about two hundred branch stations scattered over the country. At all these stations three observations are taken daily, the results of which are telegraphed to Washington. Upon the arrival of each set of dispatches a chart is made out, and forwarded to the principal cities. The tri daily reports to headquarters include the state of the barometer, thermometer, hygrometer (showing the moisture in the atmosphere,) direction of the wind, velocity of the latter in miles and pounds of pressure, the kind and amount of upper and lower clouds, rain, hail, snow or sleet, as the case may be, and such other information as may carefully describe the atmospheric surroundings of the locality whence the reports come.

In New York City the office is situated on top of the Equitable Insurance building. I paid a visit to the superintendent in his sky parlor, the other day and was particularly interested in the little machine which indicates the rate at which the wind may be blowing at any time. On an elevated place where the breeze is unobstructed, are four hollow hemispherical cups so arranged as to catch the wind. The cups are at either end of two rods which are crossed at their centers, and rest at that point on a registering rod connected with a disc which in its turn is connected by electricity with a registering drum in the office of the superintendent. The disc on the rod is so arranged that it makes one revolution as each mile of wind passes. The electric current is broken by points coming in contact with each other during a revolution of the disc, causing a pencil in the registering machine to indicate the fact upon a drum covered with paper and kept revolving by means of clock-work. The paper over this drum is divided by lines with spaces representing hours and fractions thereof. The pencil follows a straight line until the magnet is released, when the lead point makes a mark to the left, and immediately flies back again. The spaces between these marks indicate, of course, the velocity of the wind per hour. The large stations are supplied with presses and type, and early in the morning (three or four o'clock) bulletins are printed and mailed to postmasters in the vicinity. These are called "Farmer's Bulletins," and are posted where they can be readily examined. The New York office sends out over seven hundred of these each morning. The apparently difficult problem of determining a storm centre, and the direction in which the storm is travelling, readily solves itself when a few points are understood.

As reports are received at the Washington office, red lines are drawn upon a chart connecting places having the same atmospheric depression. High pressure always moves towards low pressure. The storm centre is at the locality where the pressure, as indicated by the barometer, is at its lowest point. The wind is created by the denser air surrounding the centre rushing in to fill the space, the wind becoming weaker and weaker as the distance back from the storm centre increases. The signal stations having been informed by telegraph of this centre, the approach of wind is foretold, and by knowing the temperature, the amounts of moisture and cloudiness at the different localities, the state of the weather accompanying this wind can readily be ascertained. Several storm centres often occur at the same time in different sections of the country, and then there's the what's-his-name to pay. Seafaring folks consider winds as storms, whether accompanied by rain or not. The single weak point in the service in the absence of means for recording the state of the weather on the Atlantic.

But even this fault might be remedied, and indeed a plan has, I believe, already been proposed, by which a vessel kept in mid ocean could tap the Atlantic cable and forewarn both Europe and America of approaching disturbances. That something of the kind will eventually be perfected there can be no doubt, and when this is done it cannot be very long before the whole subject of weather knowledge will be reduced to an exact science.

I presume your readers have by this heard rumors at least of the great sugar controversy which has been set on foot here and in Washington, through the persistent attacts upon the New York sugar refiners, which for months past have been through a portion of the press, and through various other channels ostensibly by some American importing houses, but really by an association of Cuban sugar planters and dealers, who are working from "behind the scenes." The charges made against the refiners that they defraud the government and adulterate their sugars. Both of these charges are utterly baseless, and as to the latter, his absurdity is so evident that it hardly seems possible that it should gain credence anywhere; and yet I learn from the largest wholesale grocery houses in the city that the story of adulteration has in some quarters scared their customers into refusing to buy American refined sugars. Truth, they say, lies at the bottom of a well; but in this case it is bound to come to the surface. And when the truth is known the animus as well as the falsity of these rumors will be plainly seen. If the agitation continues I shall devote a letter to the subject including a description of the processes of sugar refining. RADIX.

Not long since the President and Secretaries Evarts and Thompson offered General Grant the courtesies of the steamer Richmond which sails on December 4 tour of the Indian and Pacific Oceans. A dispatch has been received from Gen. Grant accepting the courtesy. The Richmond will visit Cylon, Canglok, Manilla, Hong Kong and the principle ports of China and Japan, and will be gone at least a year. Gen. Grant will take passage at Ville Franeha. This ship is to go through the Suez canal, and spend nearly a year in explorations in a commercial and scientific exploring tour along the coasts of Asia and among the Islands of the Pacific ocean, including British India and China and Japan and the islands of Sumatra, Borneo, Australia, Van Diemen, New Guinea, New Zealand, etc. Gen. Grant has been formally invited by the secretaries of State and of the Navy to take the trip, and has replied that he will probably accept the invitation. And, as there will probably be Democratic journals mean and ignorant enough to set up the cry that this will be traveling at the expense of the United States for a year without any legal appropriation to cover such expenditure, let us explain in advance that all the United States offers Gen. Grant is the use of state-rooms on the ship. The expense to the United States will be nothing. Gen Grant and his family will fare with the officers of the ship, who provide their own mess-tables. He will pay for everything he has except the use of so much room in the ship. And his presence on the ship may be of much service to the expedition in procuring for it international courtesies and privileges from the various countries visited, and enabling the important objects of the expedition to be more speedily and successfully accomplished.

Politrent.

The Democrats are afraid Mr. Blaine will stir up Ben Hill to making another speech.

The Democratic Memphis Avalanche facetiously observes that "the banner of the Democratic party ought to be a combination of the critters disputed and the tissue paper ballot, with the legend 'Reform is necessary.'"

The Columbia, S. C. Register says that if Grant is elected in 1880, "the frightfullest civil war in all the tide of time will break out." If it did, Grant would soon break it in again.

John A. Logan seems to be the man for the Senate from Illinois.

The Richmond Dispatch says that if the North will mind its own business and let the South mind theirs, there will be no trouble. That is a resumption of the rebellious chorus, "Let us Alone," of 1861.

The Baltimore Gazette wants the cypher business probed to the bottom, as in 1850 the Democracy can carry no dead weights, political cripples, or statesmen with reputations out of repair.

The Cincinnati Enquirer reports interviews with leading men of both political parties throughout the entire South, showing the first choice among the Democrats for the Presidency to be between Thurman and Hendricks. Among the Republican candidates Grant fairly leads; next Blaine; while Conkling follows at some distance.

There would be one mighty good thing for General Grant if he would accept the throne of Bulgaris. His Majesty couldn't understand a word his subjects said when they came around the palace and wailed for collectorships and postoffices.

The Utica Republican says that the way to resumption was to resume, and that the way to stop the Southern outrages is to stop them.

The report that Tilden is trying to get control of the Democracy of New York, is confirmed by his taking possession of one of the Democratic strongholds, the Auburn State Prison.

"Let us pray !" reverently said a California Methodist clergymen, who had been warned that his auditors in a remote settlement were profane and rough, and as he said so he laid two revolvers on the desk which served him as a pulpit. Never had he preached to so attentive and silent a congregation.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are today dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant exsistence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Crouter, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many Physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, It is now an estimated fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of Lung Diseases. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Colds settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by your Druggist, GEO. W. CROUTER.

General News Summary.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—SECOND SESSION.

IN the Senate on the 3d, the standing and other committees existing at the close of the last session were continued. A bill was introduced authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue in exchange for United States notes a non-certificate of deposit of the denomination of ten dollars, or any multiple thereof not exceeding $1000, bearing 3.65 interest, and negotiable as three-per-cent. bonds. A resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information relative to the amounts, denominations and kind of silver coin, silver bullion now received in payment of customs duties since the beginning of the current fiscal year. Mr. Matthews spoke in favor of the Texas Pacific Railroad bill. A resolution was agreed to for a Committee to investigate into the expediency of making appropriations for the erection of existing lines connecting with the Indian tribes in the Territories; reporting the facts and information to the Senate copies of correspondence respecting the immunity of the diplomatic agents of a foreign Government from jurisdiction of the courts of the United States; and to report such and reading in the case of Isaac Stollmeyer. Among the bills introduced in the House were the following: To compel National Bank notes to preserve the standard silver dollars as the equivalent in value to the gold coin of the United States; to make silver a legal tender for all legal tenders for all debts due the Government; amending the Silver Remonetization act; to repeal the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the Constitution; to make silver dollars receivable for duties receivable with gold. A resolution was offered and referred for a holiday recess from the 21st of December to the 6th of January. A motion was made and defeated to take up, by a two-thirds in the affirmative—to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution declaring that the legal-tender quality of the standard silver dollar should be maintained and preserved; and that any discrimination against them in any National Bank receivers should be deemed a misdemeanor. A resolution was adopted for the appointment of a committee of nine to investigate and report the expediency of amending the naturalization and arrest of epidemic diseases.

DOMESTIC.

ON the 3d, Gen. Sherman submitted to the Joint Commission on the Transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department a number of official documents verifying his previous statements regarding the advisability of the transfer. The General described the suffering of the Indians, and said the duty should either be transferred to the Interior Department, or the Indian Bureau to the War Department. Under the existing management, the Government is very heavily taxed and the good Indian driven to the wall."

DELEGATES from seventeen States were present at the Commercial Convention which met at New Orleans on the 4th. Resolutions were almost unanimously adopted—urging upon Congress to take immediate favorable action upon the Texas Pacific Railroad bill; declaring that the aid already granted by the General Government to the Northern Pacific Company should not be withdrawn, and that the Union and Central Pacific Companies should be held to the strictest compliance with their charters and the laws regulating them.

THE large boiler in Hayden's rolling-mills, at Columbus, Ohio, exploded, on the afternoon of the 5th. Two persons were killed and several others more or less seriously injured. The mill was destroyed.

A MASS-MEETING was held in New Orleans, on the night of the 5th, at which resolutions were adopted expressing the deepest sense of gratitude to the people of the entire country for the spontaneous and generous aid extended to the residents of that city during the recent epidemic. They declare that never before has any people been the recipients of so grand a charity, and never can its impressive lesson of humanity be forgotten: that "no difference of political creed can weaken and no effort of designing politicians never, the which bind us by the most tender and sacred memories in bonds of a National brotherhood, one and indissoluble."

A NEW counterfeit of the standard-silver dollar is said to have recently made its appearance in Chicago. A lady drawing some money from the Sub-Treasury in the city, on a pension, received one of the pieces, and it was not detected until offered at one of the Chicago stores. It is described as being an exact imitation of the genuine dollar, the only difference being that it weighs seven-tenths of a grain less. The piece is made of composition heavily plated with silver.

DURING the eleven months of the present year, ending on the 30th ult., the number of immigrants arriving at the Port of New York was 72,747, against 52,000 for the same period last year, and 65,800 for the same period the year before.

A YOUNG lady named Hotham, daughter of a well-known resident of Hillside, Pa., was left at home, on the evening of the 7th, with two younger sisters, aged nine and twelve respectively. About half-past seven o'clock her brother Joseph returned home from a spelling-bee, and undertook to frighten his sisters by passing himself off for a tramp, and succeeded so well that his eldest sister shot him dead as he stood on the porch in front of the door. The only words he uttered after receiving the fatal shot were "My dear sister."

THE Poor-House in Washington County, Iowa, was burned on the afternoon of the 5th, and five of the twenty-six inmates perished in the flames.

FIFTY houses in the business portion of the Town of Macon, Miss., were destroyed by fire a few days ago. Loss, $800,000; insurance, $100,000.

IT is reported that there are now nearly, if not quite, fifty cases of leprosy in Lafourche, La., all originating from one person suffering from the disease, who some twenty years ago, settled on Bayou Lafourche.

SECY SHERMAN made his seventy-fourth call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds, of counties of 1865, on the 9th. The amount is $5,000,000—interest and principal payable March 9, 1879.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Central Executive Committee of the National party, lately in session in Washington, issued an address to the people of the United States, reviewing the rise and progress of the party, and expressing confidence that the National candidate for the Presidency, in 1880, will be elected. The address denounces the late action of the New York Clearing-House, and says the contest is between the money-power and the people, between bank-bills based on untaxed bonds and a Government legal tender. An appeal is made for organization in the interest of the National party, in every school district, city, town and ward in the country.

THE Republican candidate, Hobart B. Bigelow, has been elected Mayor of New Haven, Conn., and the Greenback candidate (Mr. Williams) has been elected Mayor of Gloucester, Mass., by a majority of 478 over the Republican nominee.

At the recent city elections in Los Angeles, all the candidates elected their entire ticket except three Councilmen.

THE Executive Committee of the National party effected a permanent organization, on the 4th, and elected Hon. Frank G. Dewess, President, and Thomas J. Durand, Secretary and Treasurer. Headquarters have been established in Washington.

ON the 4th, as Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, was ascending the stone steps leading to the National House of Representatives, on crutches, he slipped and fell, giving the knee a painful wrench, which is likely to confine him to his bed for some time.

DR. A. C. BARSTOW, of Providence, R. I., Chairman of the Board of Indian Commissioners, and representing the Congregational Church in behalf of the education and conversion of the Indian race, testified before the Joint Commission on the Transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, on the 4th, and said that, in his judgment, the proposed transfer was unwise, and if effected, would certainly work adversely to the Christian operations now in progress. E. M. Kingsley, of New York, a member of the same Board, and representing the Presbyterian denomination, said we need an army with bows and spades for the Indians, rather than an army with swords and rifles.

SUPERVISING-ARCHITECT HILL has been suspended, by order of the President, until his trial upon the indictment recently found against him by a Chicago Grand Jury. A Mr. Frazier has been appointed his successor ad interim.

OVER one hundred delegates, claiming to represent Trade-Unions in all parts of the country, met in Philadelphia, on the night of the 5th, to form a National political organization. They decided to call a National Convention, to meet about the middle of January next, either in St. Louis or Chicago.

SECY SCHURZ made a statement before the Joint Commission relative to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, on the 6th. He said he disclaimed any personal desire to retain control of the Indian service under the Interior Department. He then gave in detail his reasons why he thought the proposed transfer unwise and impolitic. He thought the Indians were entitled to humane treatment, and that could only be rendered through the processes of civilization, education and kind treatment; this the military were not fitted to promote. He denied very emphatically the red-tape system of reporting Indian outbreaks, which it had been asserted was required under the present administration of Indian affairs.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made, on the 6th, that Ormie Grant had been, the day before, released from the State Lunatic Asylum at Morris Plains, N. J., and was accompanied to his home at Elizabeth by his son.

THE United States Grand Jury at Yankton, D. T., have found twelve indictments against Dr. Livingston, et al., of the Crow Creek Indian Agency. There are said to be over 100 false vouchers by Livingston that are outlawed, and the Government will begin civil suits to recover the money thus obtained.

ON the 9th, ex-Senator Morrill appeared before the Committee on the Transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department and vigorously opposed the change. He thought the present law governing Indian affairs should be amended, and said the Indians should be localized and properly educated. Mr. Young, the Agent of the Blackfeet Indians, said they were unanimously opposed to the transfer.

FOREIGN.

M. KINDT, the Manager, and M. Fortemps, the President of the Banque de Belgique, who defrauded the bank out of $4,000,000, were convicted and sentenced, the former to fifteen years solitary confinement, and the latter to one year's imprisonment and to pay a fine of $1,000.

A VIENNA telegram of the 3d says the return of Austrian troops from Bosnia and Herzegovina had been countermanded.

ACCORDING to a Constantinople telegram of the 3d, intelligence had just been received that the Bashi-Bazouks and Circassians had defeated the Herzegovinian insurgents in the Mihalic District of Bosnia, and burned twenty villages. Of all the inhabitants only 1,000 escaped massacre.

ADDITIONAL telegrams of the 4th announce that O'Connor, another Fenian convict, had been released, and placed under the supreme City of Chester for shipment to the United States.

THE Caledonian Bank of Glasgow has gone into liquidation in consequence of its heavy loans in the City of Glasgow Bank. Its capital of $750,000 has been set aside to meet its assessment on that stock.

THE Turkish Cabinet has been dismissed and a new one formed, of which Kheireddin Pasha is Grand Vizier and Ghazi Osman Pasha Minister of War.

A BOMBEAUX (France) dispatch of the 4th says the Director of the Mint at that place had been arrested upon the charge of abstracting 1,900,000 francs' worth of silver bars belonging to the Rothschilds, and substituting therefor gilded bronze ones.

ON the 5th, the Emperor of Germany promulgated a decree announcing his resumption of the reins of government, and thanking the Crown Prince for his personal care of the Imperial duties during his illness.

A PARIS dispatch of the 5th says Turkey had ceded Alexandretta, a port on the northern coast of Syria, to Great Britain.

THE British Parliament met, on the 5th. The speech of the Queen, read by the Prime Minister, was devoted mainly to the Afghan War, and congratulated the country on the recent victory achieved by Gen. Roberts. The debate upon the reply to the Royal speech began in both Houses immediately, and the policy of the Government was sharply criticised. The addresses were adopted.

THE Bishop of Durham, Eng., has resigned his Diocese in consequence of his bodily infirmities.

DEFINITE Intelligence from Gen. Roberts' column in the Peiwar Pass was received in London, on the morning of the 5th, stating that he was with the Afghans at first, but then Roberts at last succeeded in flanking their position, and attacked them in the rear. After a hard-fought engagement, they were defeated and compelled to abandon the position. The Afghan artillery and a large quantity of ammunition were captured. The British loss was about eighty killed and wounded.

ACCORDING to a London dispatch of the 6th, Gen. Roberts would go into winter quarters on the heights east of the Peiwar Pass.

LONDON dispatches of the 6th say it was reported in influential quarters that an arrangement with Russia was on the tapis, and that it was taking the shape of a partition of Afghanistan.

The Act for the Resumption of Specie Payments.

THE text of the Resumption act is as follows:

SECTION 1. Provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, as rapidly as practicable, to cause to be coined, at the several mints of the United States, silver dollars in accordance of 10, 26 and fat cents, of standard silver, and to issue them in redemption of an equal number and amount of fractional currency of similar denominations, which shall be received in payment for silver coins through the mints the Sub-Treasuries, Public Depositaries and Postoffices of the United States; and, upon such issue he is hereby authorized and required to redeem an equal amount of such fractional currency, until the whole amount of such fractional currency outstanding shall be redeemed.

SEC. 2. That so much of Sec. 3,524 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as provides for a charge of one-fifth of 1 per centum for redeeming United States gold bullion into bullion is hereby repealed, and hereafter no charge shall be made for that service.

SEC. 3. That Sec. 5,177 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, limiting the aggregate amount of circulation of National Banking Associations, be, and is hereby, repealed; and each existing banking association may increase its circulation to the extent of one hundred per centum without regard to said limitation, and new associations may be organized in accordance with existing law, and may issue circulation to the extent of one hundred per centum; but no increase of circulation by existing banks, and no new banking associations, shall be authorized in States and Territories which have not their full quota of National bank currency, based on population as provided by existing law, and in case of the withdrawal and redistribution of circulation among the States and Territories as herein provided. And whenever and so often as any banking association, not increasing its circulation as aforesaid, shall be duly of the Secretary of the Treasury, that the circulation of any other National banks in excess only of $300,000,000 is required to be withdrawn and redistributed to other States, such withdrawal shall be made pro rata with the circulation so issued to any such association, and the provisions of Sec. 5,169 of the Revised Statutes, prohibiting the withdrawal of the circulation notes of National banks for the purpose of reducing the amount of their outstanding circulation, shall not apply to such withdrawal. And after the first day of January, A. D. 1879, the banking associations in the City of New York, to which the United States legal-tender notes then held in the Treasury may be issued, shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the application of the Associated Banks in the City of New York, in sums of not less than $50. And in making the deposits of such notes the Secretary of the Treasury shall require the banks receiving the same to comply with the conditions by this act authorized or required as to notes issued on new and surplus resources from time to time, in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall make such deposits in the order of the date of the application therefor, and shall distribute the deposits among the banks in proportion to the amount of their capital stock paid in and surplus fund, as provided by existing law: Provided, That the provisions of this act are hereby repealed after the first day of January, A. D. 1879.

SEC. 4. That provided that the legal-tender circulation should not be contracted below $300,000,000 prior to the 31st of May, 1878, a bill was approved which has had the effect of fixing the legal-tender circulation at $346,681,016. The text of this bill is as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for any officer of any bank or any other officer under him to cancel or retire any United States legal-tender notes now issued. And when any of said notes may be redeemed or received into any bank, Treasury, Sub-Treasury, or any assistant Treasurer, they may be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation; but they shall be canceled and held in the Treasury whenever received or deposited, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation; and the Secretary is hereby herein shall prohibit the cancellation and reissue of said notes, as provided in this section or other notes of like denomination in their stead as now provided by law. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

A good joke is told at the expense of Mr. Silas G. Pratt, a Chicago pianist. He some time ago wrote a grand symphony with three parts. A grand symphony has four parts, and this principle of musical composition the composer seems to have forgotten. The grave mistake was discovered by several well-known Chicago musicians, and was the occasion of some merriment. "But," said one of them, Mr. Pratt, for he may write the fourth part!"

D. C. SMITH, of the clothing firm of Smith Bros., of St. Paul, Minn., committed suicide at a late hour, the other night, by climbing outside the railing on the wagon bridge over the Mississippi, shooting himself with a pistol and dropping into the river, ninety-five feet below. After striking the water he screamed once for help, and was heard moaning and struggling some minutes after, as he floated past the Short Line Railway's transfer-house, a short distance below the bridge.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

CHRISTMAS EVE.

The stockings were hung in the corner,
They—three all in a row;
Tall Fred's and dear little Bessie's,
And Will's, with its scarlet toe.
The guest-night it was worn down,
The evening prayers were said;
And the quiet that reigned in the parlor, told
That the children had gone to bed.

Upstairs, from the cozy nursery,
Where the lamp burned soft and low,
I could hear the prattle of voices
Come floating o'er me, below.
And I knew bright eyes were trying
A lengthened watch to keep;
Lest Santa Claus pass by them,
And they be fast asleep.

"But," said the voice of Mabel,
"Perhaps he won't come, because
Lucy Grey says there's no such person
As good old Santa Claus.
And if there isn't—truly,
Why then he won't—you know;
And our stockings will all be empty
From the toe way down to the toe."

Then up the Walk, and down it,
At such a suggestion as this
Each restless urchin started in dismay,
And visions of Christmas presents
Of skates and sleds and bridled,
Of gaiters and shoes without number,
And a wonderful trumpet to blow!

And with eyes all aglow with excitement
And look through the nursery door,
"Still," she don't know anything, Mabel!"
I wish you would stop your talking,
For our stockings are hung there, too!
And I know they'll be full to the meeting,
Cause mamma told me so."

And I thought, (I mental childhood,
How you shame our cold years,
And so early learn faith a lesson,
That we learn so slowly, and late.
And I thanked the little teacher,
And silently asked, tonight knew
That the way God deals us is always right.
For "Our Father knows best."

—Youth's Companion.

TWO DAYS BEFORE CHRISTMAS.

"ONE two-dollar bill, two one-dollars, and a fifty-cent piece, and two twenty-fives. That's five dollars. And I want to get a present for mamma and papa and Molly and Ned and Tom and the two maid-girls."

Ella Lindsey, otherwise Trot Lindsay, was sitting at a nursery window, with the contents of a tin savings-bank tipped into her lap, and a forest of silver and copper coin standing up between her knees. But now I want to make any presents because I can't buy much; but I do. Everybody'll give me something, and I feel mean."

Here Trot suddenly jumped down from her chair, and went over to the other window, where her seventeen-year-old sister Molly was sewing.

"Molly, the money I've been saving up for months and months to buy me some clothes with, and I'm too old for that!" And the eyes of the little girl who had arrived at the mature age of eight, counted her money again.

"Five dollars.

"Why, didn't think of that, but I can tell. I guess I'll take third one—it's about the color. How much is it?"

"That I can see now? I'll sell that for fifteen dollars."

Trot dropped the switch as if it had been a red-hot poker, and stood for a moment grasped her umbrella and turned away.

"It won't do to beat people down," she reflected, "but folks must be dreadful extravagant. My winter cloak only cost fifteen dollars. Mamma said so."

Made wiser by experience, she went quite a long distance before venturing into a fancy store, where a gray-haired clerk smiled benignly down on the little face under the big roses. Trot had seen some velvet-cased pictures in the window, which were shown her, and which, of course, proved too high.

"Oh dear!" said the disappointed questioner, with tears of vexation in her eyes, "everything is ten or fifteen dollars."

"I have plenty of cheap things," was the compassionate response. "What do you want to get? Here are some handkerchiefs and work-baskets. You may have this box for seventy-five cents."

It was a pretty Indian basket, whose interior was attract the unlearned eye.

Trot was delighted.

"Oh, I can take that! and I guess mamma'll like it. Have you got some-thing else, cheap? Something for a man, you know?"

The salesman made a puzzled review of his shelves.

"Would you like a pipe, or a cigar-holder, or—"

"What are those scarlet sort of pouches?" Trot demanded. "Papa's got lots of pipes, but he ain't got a tobacco pouch."

The clerk produced the article at which she pointed, with a laugh.

"That isn't a tobacco-pouch, that is a child's toy. Something they call a gyrator," and, pressing a concealed spring, he caused the mouth of the embroidered case to open, and a pink wooden man to leap out, whose arms and legs began to fly round in the wildest fashion.

"Can't you take the man out?" inquired Trot, surveying the figure with great surprise.

"Yes, you can have him taken out. But you can have the case and man and all for thirty cents."

"I can? Oh, that's over so nice!" and Trot went out of the store greatly encouraged, with her pouch and her basket.

"I don't know what to get Molly. There's some pretty calico." I might get Bridget and Ann some calico-dresses. I've got three dollars and ninety-five cents left."

"Well, what can I do for you?" inquired a supercilious young man, with weak eyes and light hair, who stood behind a calico counter.

"I want to look at these," said poor Trot, who was almost borne down by the throng of people. "How much is this striped one?"

"All twelve cents a yard, every one of them."

"Only twelve cents! Often, I'll have—I guess I'll have about —"

"Want it for yourself?"

"For a maid-girl," said Trot with dignity. "She's very large, and I guess I'll have twenty yards—let me see what that would come to."

The clerk laughed immoderately, at what, Trot could not tell, then whispered to a brother salesman, who leaned indolently over the counter, and laughed too, looking at Trot.

"Pretty good joke, eh?" said the first, as he rapidly measured off the calico. "Where'll you have it sent?"

Trot, who was struggling to make out two dollars and forty cents, hand-ed over that amount with a sigh of relief.

"That's just right. You needn't send it. I'll carry it."

"Come, now, you can't do that. You're not as large as your maid-servant, you know. Where do you live?"

Columbus avenue. I'm Ella Lindsay."

"All right. What number?"

"I don't know, but I can find it. You do up the bundle."

Despite her resolution, Trot was so appalled at the size and weight of the package returned, that she gave up all idea of getting another calico dress for Ann, and labored heavily out into the street, with her basket, pouch, bundle and umbrella. Her little feet were soaked and very tired indeed, and the persistent storm almost blinded her; but there were Ned and Tom and Molly to be thought of.

"I wonder," she mused, shifting the heavy bundle, as the string cut her fingers, "if I couldn't buy a mustache for Ned. I heard him wishing he had one, and people said hair. I'll try!" And walking into a gentleman's furnishing store, she astonished a smartly-looking boy behind the counter:

"Do you have mustaches?"

"Have what?"

"Mustaches, please."

The boy surveyed Trot a moment, and then was overcome by the "ridiculous side of the thing," as he said to a brother clerk, when he had finished laughing.

"Here's a young one wants a mustache. Did you ever!"

"Maybe she wants a false one for theatricals or something."

"I don't. I want it for my brother Ned," said Trot, standing her ground. "It's got one, and I heard him say he wanted one. Now you get 'em to sell!" she insisted, getting red in the face as the boy disappeared behind the counter with a fresh laughter.

Trot certainly was a funny sight standing there, with the bedraggled big hat and flaming cheeks. The senior clerk, with a wink to the proprietor, remarked:

"I shouldn't think your brother could be old enough to have a mustache. Tell him to wait till it comes."

Now it Trot had one failing it was temper. Stamping her little foot on the ground she exclaimed, with flashing eyes:

"I shan't either! He's old enough now. And if he hasn't got a mustache on his upper lip like you, he's got a dear little one on his ear, so there!"

A perfect shriek of laughter followed this speech, in the midst of which Trot rushed out of the store and hurried back along the stormy street with tears rolling down her cheeks.

"Oh dear! oh dear! those hateful people! I wish I hadn't come at all. Everybody laughs at me, and I can't go home with presents for only half of 'em."

"One dollar and fifty-five cents, and three presents to get beside Ann's. Oh! I'd better go back to the man that sold things so cheap!"

What a long way it was back, struggling against the wind and storm! And how Trot's arm ached! But there was the store at last. She dragged herself in and asked, with what strength she had left, for the man that sold her the basket.

"He has gone to dinner," said the lady she asked.

Poor Trot sat down on her bundle of calico and burst into tears of such deep that the lady hurried round the counter and took her in her arms.

"Why my child, how are you are, and how cold! How far have you to go?"

"I can't go at all till I get my presents," sobbed persistent Trot; and then she told her story, still sitting on the calico, and ended with a sudden question:

"What time is it?"

"About half-past three."

"Oh! ever so much past lunch. What will they think is the matter?"

"Where is your house?" asked the lady, who had carried Trot into a rear room, and, having set her down by a stove, was trying to draw off her sodden shoes.

"Columbus avenue."

"But what number?"

"I don't know, but I know the house because there is a dead oleander in the balcony next door."

Trot chatted away while the lady proceeded to hang up her stockings, dry her drenched feet, and remove her wet clothing.

"I must find some things for you to wear home, and then I think I will take you there in a car. Jamie will take my place for a while," she said, looking toward a boy in the store.

"But I haven't got my presents."

"Oh! I forgot. You want to get four, and have about a dollar and a half, haven't you? Suppose you get some candy for your brothers?"

"You don't keep it, do you?"

"No, but Jamie can go and get you some. Two pounds, at thirty cents a pound, would leave you ninety-five cents."

"Only ninety-five cents for Molly and Ann!"

"You can get a little ivory tablet, that I think your sister would like, for half a dollar. And for Ann—"

The lady thought a moment.

"Wouldn't she like some bright ribbon? Jamie can get that, too. Three yards of scarlet ribbon, enough for bows for neck and hair, will be very pretty."

Poor Trot was too much tired out to care what was done. When Jamie returned with his purchases she was half asleep, done up in a shawl. The multiplicity of her bundles decided the lady to call a cab, in which Trot was presently placed, her wet clothes in a separate parcel, and her feet encased in a pair of number four boots, that had to be taken on. Very thankful was she to come in sight of the aforesaid dead oleander, and very thankful were the startled inmates of her home to see her safe and sound. Not quite sound, however, for she was a little feverish, and in much disreputable attire that she was conveyed triumphantly upstairs.

Great amusement was then created by the contents of the cab, conspicuous among which was Molly's rumpled hat. After delivering these the lady, refusing more substantial thanks, was driven away.

It was not till the next noon that Trot felt sufficiently recovered to attend to her presents. She then begged Ned to take the gyrator out of the pouch, and leave it free for tobacco. She took him into the nursery to do it, where there was no one but Molly, and while he worked she told about the episode of the mustache. She felt perfectly sure of sympathy, and was utterly amazed when Ned, after staring at her a minute in blank surprise, threw down the gyrator and laughed till the room rang, while Molly created a chorus by joining in.

"Molly! Molly!" gasped Ned, finally sitting up, and wiping the tears from his eyes. "Did you hear? She told the man I had one on my ear! O Molly! I'll be the death of me yet!"

"You have got one on your ear!" said the indignant Trot. "I saw it the other day—a little one just coming!"

"O Ned!" Molly could say no more.

"She saw that mole on your ear, and it has two or three hairs on it. Never mind, Trot dear, you didn't know any better."

But Trot did mind. For some years the history of that day's shopping was a standing joke in the family, and the heroine was generally ashamed of it. But now that the aforesaid heroine is a young lady, she can laugh as merrily as anyone at the remembrance of the Christmas when she tried to buy a brother a mustache.—Hannah B. Hudson, in Wide-Awake.

The Peacock Hall of Delhi.

Peculiarly set apart for the reception of nobility is a quadrangle of moderate dimensions. The building is a very beautiful pavilion of white marble supported on massive pillars of the same material, the whole of which, with the connecting arches, is richly ornamented with flowers of inlaid mosaic work of different colored stones and gilding. It is raised on a terrace four feet high, the floor of which is composed of flags of white marble. Between each of the front rows of pillars is a balustrade of marble, elaborately carved in several designs of perforated work. The top of the building is ornamented with four marble pavilions with gilt cupolas. The ceiling of the pavilion was originally completely covered with filigree work; but in 1799 the Mahrattas, after a capture of the city, took the silver down and melted it, the value of the same being estimated at nearly $1,000,000. In the cornice at each end of the interior hall is suspended in letters of gilt in the Persian language, "If there is a paradise on earth it is this." In the hall was the famous peacock throne, so called from its having the figures of two peacocks standing behind it, their tails being expanded and the whole so inlaid with sapphires, rubies, emeralds, pearls and other precious stones of appropriate colors as to represent life. The throne itself is six feet long by four feet broad. It stood on six massive feet, which, with the body, were of solid gold, inlaid with rubies, emeralds and diamonds. It was surmounted by a canopy of gold supported by twelve pillars, all richly emblazoned with costly gems, and a fringe of pearls ornamented the borders of the canopy. Between the two peacocks stood the figure of a parrot, of the ordinary size, said to have been carved out of a single emerald. On either side of the throne stood a chauri, or umbrella, one of the Oriental emblems of royalty. They were made of crimson velvet, richly embro

THAT NEW PROPELLER.—The Traverse City papers say that Perry Hannah has entered into a contract with Grand Haven parties for the building of the Company's new propeller. The dimensions of the boat are to be as follows: Length, 140 feet; breadth of beam, 23 feet; She is to be fitted up in first class style for a passenger boat, with two commodious cabins, one on the main deck aft, the other above. The motive power of the boat will be one low-pressure engine, with cylinder twenty-two inches in diameter and ten feet stroke, with a return flue boiler 16 feet long and eight feet diameter of shell, built to stand 200 pounds of steam pressure. Her ordinary speed is expected to be 14 miles an hour. It is intended to put this boat on the route between Traverse City and Little Traverse. She will leave Traverse City every morning, making all stops, run to Little Traverse and Petoskey and back the same day. She will be on the route by the first of May. The owner of the new propeller will be from $25,000 to $30,000. One gratifying point in connection with the fact that the contract for this fine new steamer is to be given to Capt. O. E. Wilbur, who has served the Union Line for the past two seasons. He has lots of friends down this way. Now let Mr. Hannah the "old line" to connect the Charlevoix, and everything will be all right.

A FINE PICTURE.—Art can claim one of her most devoted votaries in the person of our friend John Woods, of this place. John has executed several pictures, some which have evoked many compliments. But now the whole of Newman's restaurant receives the best of all Woods' efforts. It is a life-size portrait of Lavinia Beckwith. We do not claim to be a critic on sisterhood of art, but we call it a good portrait of Miss Cline, whose acquaintance we have long enjoyed. Enough, we can only utter honest words of praise for honest John's more than ordinary amateur talent.

WE predict lively times here for Charlevoix next season. With the dredging out of our harbor we may expect to see the entry into our harbor as a regular stopping place the Menominee and Hannah Lay & Co. new steamer. Both captains have expressed this as their intentions. This in connection with our inland steamers which will each make semi-daily trips, will make Charlevoix a point of transfer for the extensive travel which is expected, and the large amount of freight which must of necessity be distributed from this point. The indications are certainly very flattering.

The farmers were all in town Saturday. And this though brings another. It is gratifying to reflect how benefits and general prosperity have multiplied in this region within the last few years But a short time ago more of our country people came to town on foot and carried home their small purchases in a sack strapped upon their backs than came and went any other way. Now we look out of our window and see three same people in town with well fed horses, and their sleighs loaded with grain or corn-fed pork for this market. They receive cash for it, and go home as they do in any other civilized farming country. These benefits have not ceased to multiply yet. In the increasing prosperity and thrift of our farmers we see growth and development in all about us; for in the agricultural element lies the source of all that builds up and enlarges

Smith of the Clarion Sentinel, says: "Ally King sinks the Petoskey Record as the most readable paper in Northern Michigan." We know he thought so all the time, but hardly expected him to own up to it.—Record.

The ladies are ours. Now, we shall no such thing. That would be altogether too big a fie to tell for the simple sake of an editorial compliment. Just look again.

Little Traverse Republican.

The Cross Village Indians, some 72 in number who have just returned from their annual deer hunt at Alpena, had unusual good luck this year, having captured one hundred and sixty deer. The champion "John Ettagumike" killed thirty-two deer and one bear. How is that for a score?

John Wagley Jr. has launched his schooner "Alice" and goes to Elk Rapids with a load of wheat for W. B. Parker.

Father Welkamp of the Convent farm, has housed over one thousand bushels of potatoes this fall. One day they dug and put in their root-house over five hundred bushels.

Did you ever think of it? The SENTINEL is larger and better than some papers we might mention that are printed in places of double the population of Charlevoix? People should encourage an enterprise of this kind by giving it a hearty support.

Petoskey Record

Capt. Wm. Little, who ran the tug Nellie Booth here last summer, is now getting her for a run in Saginaw. He takes her in to bring another load up here next spring and runs it between this place and Little Traverse.

The grist mill of Bazen Ingalls & Son is now in full blast sure enough, and they are turning out flour very fast. If wheat continues to come in as fast as it has for the past few days, they will be obliged to run the mill night and day to supply the wants of their customers.

Wm. Adams, of Springvale township, had down a large tree last Wednesday, which stood near his house, a tree constructed not long since. He supposed the tree would fall away from the building, but contrary to his expectations, it fell directly across the house, smashing in the roof and raking the entire structure badly. His family were all out of the building at the time, as it was a matter of doubt as to the direction the tree would fall, and as it turned out, it it was fortunate that Mr. Adams' wife and children were out of danger.

Grant or Blaine.

Washington Cor. of Cleveland Herald.

Nothing in the political future looks plainer than that the struggle for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1880 will be between Blaine and Grant. There is no longer any possibility of defeating the candidacy of "the old man," as the ex-President is familiarly termed in Washington. He will be in the field when the time comes, and will have a powerful support, not only among the politicians but among the people, with whom his errors of administration have not dimmed the luster of his military fame. No candidate has any chance of making head against him except Senator Blaine, who has devoted body of adherents in every State, and whose personal popularity and political sagacity will make him the rallying point for all opposition to the third term scheme. Sherman can only be a lieutenant to Grant to gather up votes and turnel them over to him, unless Grant's success in the convention should become impossible. In this case, joining the Grant forces to his own, Conkling might outnumber Blaine. He certainly cannot outgeneral him. Before the present session closes I predict that a division of the Republican Congressmen into Blaine men and Grant men will begin to take place, and from the representatives the division will soon extend to the masses of the party.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made by Hiram H. Simons, of Antrim, Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Daniel Dyer, of the State and county aforesaid, dated October 19th, A. DETROIT

Post & Tribune.

The Metropolitan Republican Journal of Michigan.

The publishers of the Detroit Post and Tribune offer to the record of journalistic enterprise and political instruction notice in the first year of the existence of the consolidated newspaper as the satisfactory evidence of the excellence of its claim upon the public confidence and support. The paper will continue to be the sincere, vigorous, and able advocate of the Republican political doctrine, of an honest and rational financial and fiscal policy, and of wise development.

In its large resources, its ample facilities in news gathering, its wide circulation, and its position as the recognized organ of the dominant party in the state, it also undertakes its supplement promise by performance, and to fully meet the expectations of its patrons.

The news department of the Post and Tribune will be kept fresh, accurate and complete; the paper be issued at the largest facilities or getting intelligence, foreign, domestic, state and local, and maintaining special correspondents at all important points in Michigan, and at the main centers of news elsewhere.

Its compilations of State news and its commercial reports are well known for fullness and accuracy.

Its editorial page discusses current issues candidly, and from the standpoint of sound principle, and of an experience in journalism, and of an acquaintance with political and economic principles. All matters of special public interest will receive from it the same intelligent and patient thorough investigation which it has given to the important phases of the currency question.

Its columns will be rich in miscellaneous reading, including sketches, poems, and selections from the current literature of the day. Especial care will be taken to keep the paper pure and unobjectionable in tone.

One page of the Post and Tribune is devoted to matter prepared for the rural community, containing discussions of questions of interest to practical agriculture, letters on farm and home topics, recipes, etc.

New features will be added to the paper during 1879, and neither pains nor expense will be spared in keeping the Post and Tribune a

First-Class Family Paper.

Strong in all its departments, and in every way worthy of the great State with whose history and growth it has been so long and closely identified.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Benzie—ss. At a session of the Probate Court for said county, held at the Probate Office in the Village of St. James, on the 27th day of November, A. D. 1878. Present, C. B. Wright, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Michael Gallagher, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Hev. Peter Gallagher, praying for the appointment of an administrator of said estate.

Thereupon it is ordered, that Tuesday, the 15th day of March, 1879, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate Office in the village of St. James, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted. And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper circulated in said county for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

On Tuesday the Tillson took from 46 nets three tons of fish, being equal quantities of trout and whitefish. The Tillson will tow here next season, Capt. Wilson left here Saturday for Sheboygan Wis., leaving the tug in charge of Engineer Fred Shraudt who will remain here through the winter.

A nice article of ladies' ties at Fox, Rose & Buttars'.

REASONS why a liberal appropriation should be made for Charlevoix Harbor this winter are more numerous and far weightier than ever before. The heavy snow fall thus far this winter indicates that the winter will be favorable for the various Pine Lake industries which are the feeders to our shipping interests. The coming spring our inland coasts will be lined with the products of our hardwood forests, and our saw-mills, which before the middle of next summer will be increased by two of good capacity, will swell the bulk of our exports to dimensions largely in excess of those of any previous year. Add to this the natural stimulous attendant upon reviving trade, and the necessity for harbor improvement here is pressing. The entrance to our harbor is in a deplorable condition, having a depth over the bar of barely six feet. Hence, when we say that an appropriation for our harbor this winter is a necessity, we mean all that the word implies. The policy, from whatever source it emanates, which will block commerce by withholding appropriations from harbors of this class and condition, is one of foolishness and stupidity. It springs from ignorance and a spirit of spite.

General News Summary.

FORTY FIFTH CONGRESS—SECOND SESSION.

A BILL was introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 10th, to authorize the exchange of subsidiary coin for trade dollars. A resolution was reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs authorizing the appointment of Dr. Justus Fowell as an Assistant Surgeon in the Army, in explanation it was stated that the doctor had already rendered services as Assistant Surgeon, but could not be regularly appointed because he had served in the Confederate army when a minor; the bill was then passed to it. A resolution was agreed to requesting the Secretary to transmit to the Senate a copy of the testimony of James E. Anderson relating to the Pacific Railroad Bill, taken before the House Committee. The bill relating to Presidential elections was further debated, Messrs. Morgan and Edmunds supporting, and Mr. Jones (Florida) opposing the measure.

In the House, Speaker announced as members of the Yellow Fever Commission, Messrs. Monroe, Virginia; Gunter, Cartwright, Morse, Garfield, Harmer and Cutting. Mr. Conger, Republican, of Iowa, said that the Democratic opposition kills the latter appropriating $1,000,000 were reported from Committee of the Whole and passed. The request of the senate to be furnished with a copy of the testimony relating to Senator Matthews was, on motion of Mr. Potter, complied with.

THE Fortification Appropriation bill was reported in the Senate, on the 11th, as was also the House bill to amend the drawback law relating to pensions; to secure a more efficient collection of the revenue from spirits. The bill was passed to authorize duplicates of the engines at steam vessels of the United States Marine Institution of New York. The bill in regard to the grant of the Des Moines rapids was further debated and finally passed—28 to 26. Adjourned to the 16th. . . . In the House, the bill looking to an investigation of the conduct of J. C. Davenport, Supervisor of Elections of New York, was amended so as to make the investigation extend to his conduct on the days of registration, and was then adopted without objection. A bill was introduced and referred to make the trade-dollar a legal tender.

SENATE not in session on the 14th. . . . In the House, the Senate bill authorizing the issue of duplicates of registered bonds stolen from the Sub-Treasury in the city of New York, was passed. The Indian Appropriation bill was reported and made the special order for Saturday next. The Senate amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill were nearly all non-concurred in. A resolution was adopted requiring the bill providing for the issue of duplicate bonds and the capture of marauders, and calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information as to why he had not surrendered the guilty and two possible parties to the Utah Indians to the authorities of Kansas and Nebraska. The Geneva Award bill was further debated, but the Senate bill to regulate Presidential elections was referred to a committee on the original bill.

A NUMBER of bills were introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 16th. The Consular and Diplomatic and the Naval Appropriation bills were reported.

A motion to take up the Pacific Railroad bill was rejected—yeas, 25; nays, 29. The resolution of Mr. Blaine in regard to elections in the South was taken up, and a motion to lay on the table was rejected—yeas, 5; nays, 54—Messrs. Davis (W. Va.), Maxey and Withers voting in the affirmative. The amendment of Mr. Thurman was then agreed to without division. After which Mr. Conkling submitted an amendment, which was ordered to be printed. . . . In the House the investigation made by a special committee of nine Republicans instead of the usual committee; all blame then submitted an amendment declaring the nomination to hold testimony by letter or any sub-committee, and to visit localities at the country when and where, in their judgment, facilitate any portion of the objects of the investigation. Mr. Butler moved to amend the amendment so as to provide that the committee shall sit only at the capital and not sub-committees. Mr. Butler's amendment was opposed by Mr. Hale, and, after debate, was rejected—yeas, 90; nays, 127. Mr. Davis (W. Va.) then proposed an amendment that the committee and sub-committees should sit with open doors when requested to do so by a majority of the committee. After a lengthy debate this amendment was also rejected—yeas, 98; nays, 120. An executive session was then held. Among the bills introduced and referred in the House were the following: Providing for the payment of duties on imports in United States bonds; refunding the charge for Post-office envelopes to five cents; for the exchange of standard fair trade dollars; to limit the coinage of the standard silver dollars to five dollars per capita, according to the census about to be taken, and to make them a legal tender in the amount of twenty dollars for all debts; providing for the free coinage of silver; proposing a penalty of $1,000 to be imposed upon any National Bank for each officer in refusing to receive or pay out the standard silver dollars the same as other lawful money; providing for the circulation of National Bank notes of less than five dollars after resumption, the same as before; to abolish the Bureau of Military Justice. District of Columbia affairs were considered.

THE Belgium steamer Herman Ludwig, formerly the Clyde steamer Andes, left New York on the 29th of October for Antwerp, with forty persons on board. Since that time no tidings have been received from her, and she is believed to have foundered in mid-ocean. The date of her departure coincides with a series of very disastrous gales on the Atlantic coast, and she is believed to have perished in one of them. The Ludwig was built in 1870, and her cargo was valued at $150,000.

THE Iowa and Ohio State Granges met in annual Convention, on the 10th, the former at Des Moines and the latter at Columbus. Forty-eight members were present in the Iowa Convention. Reports were read in the Ohio gathering showing the organization in the State to be in a healthy condition. The Secretary reported 977 subordinate Granges in working order, with about 40,000 members. A motion to amend the constitution of the National Grange so as to reduce the monthly dues from ten to five cents was defeated.

ON the 11th, additional details of the great storm of the preceding day throughout New England and the Middle States were received. The river which skirts the Town of Westfield, Mass., overflowed its banks and poured through the center of the village, destroying a large number of dwellings and several large factories, and involving a loss of more than $250,000. On the Troy & Greenfield Railroad a freight train plunged into a fifty-foot washout, and a similar accident occurred at Wentworth, N. H. The dam of the Sutton Manufacturing Company, at Wilkinsonville, Mass., was carried away, causing a loss of $20,000. In Maine, the Grand Trunk, the Androscoggin and the Maine Central Railroads were very seriously damaged and the running of trains suspended. In Leominster, Mass., several dams were swept away and many factories destroyed. Great damage was also caused at South Fitchburg. Mill River Valley from Goshen to Northampton suffered a loss of between $100,000 to $200,000 in the destruction of roads and bridges. The Ashfield (Mass.) reservoir gave way and destroyed the Village of Conway, a few miles below. Many other pieces in Western Massachusetts suffered to a greater or less extent, the damage to that section being estimated at from $750,000 to $1,000,000. In New Hampshire and Vermont also great damage was done. All through Pennsylvania the storm was exceptionally severe, and a great amount of property destroyed, and several lives lost. In the vicinity of Port Jervis, N. Y., several fine bridges were carried away and great desolation wrought. The damage at Kingston, Wilkes-Barre, Eddyville and Rondout, N. Y., is roughly estimated at $500,000. Several lives were lost in that vicinity.

THERE were sixty-six delegates present, out of seventy entitled to seats, at the session of the Iowa State Grange, on the 11th. Resolutions were adopted, denouncing the repeal of the Maximum Railroad law, demanding its restoration, and declaring that "we will vote for no man, no matter what party may nominate him who is not definitely and positively pledged to use his best endeavors to secure such restoration." The monthly dues were reduced from ten to five cents, in accordance with the action of the National Grange, and the dues of ladies were abolished.

THE Ohio State Grange, on the 12th, elected J. M. Brigham, of Wauseon, Master, in place of S. H. Ellis, declined. Mr. Ellis was elected Chairman of the Executive Committee.

THE First National and the Commercial Banks, of Saratoga, N. Y., suspended, on the 13th, owing to a run growing out of the defalcation of County-Treasurer Wright.

THE Secretary of the Iowa State Grange, at the recent session of that body, reported the total receipts for the year at $9,304.92; expenditures, $8,941.95. The Master was instructed to petition the next Legislature to restore the railroad tariff, and to ask Congress to establish sister-State commerce tariff regulations.

IN the Ohio State Grange, on the 13th, a committee appointed to consider the condition of the Granges reported that the Order was not in a healthy condition as formerly, and that both the number of Granges and their membership were smaller than before, but that the Granges now existing are on a firm basis. The action of the National Grange to memorializing Congress to repeal the tax on tobacco was disapproved of.

IN Custer County, Neb., a few days ago, two men, named Mitchell and Ketchum, were convicted of the murder of Mr. Bainie in regard to elections in the South was taken up, and a motion to lay on the table was rejected—yeas, 5; nays, 54—Messrs. Davis (W. Va.), Maxey and Withers voting in the affirmative. The amendment of Mr. Thurman was then agreed to without division. After which Mr. Conkling submitted an amendment, which was ordered to be printed. . . . In the House the investigation made by a special committee of nine Republicans instead of the usual committee; all blame then submitted an amendment declaring the nomination to hold testimony by letter or any sub-committee, and to visit localities at the country when and where, in their judgment, facilitate any portion of the objects of the investigation. Mr. Butler moved to amend the amendment so as to provide that the committee shall sit only at the capital and not sub-committees. Mr. Butler's amendment was opposed by Mr. Hale, and, after debate, was rejected—yeas, 90; nays, 127. Mr. Davis (W. Va.) then proposed an amendment that the committee and sub-committees should sit with open doors when requested to do so by a majority of the committee. After a lengthy debate this amendment was also rejected—yeas, 98; nays, 120. An executive session was then held. Among the bills introduced and referred in the House were the following: Providing for the payment of duties on imports in United States bonds; refunding the charge for Post-office envelopes to five cents; for the exchange of standard fair trade dollars; to limit the coinage of the standard silver dollars to five dollars per capita, according to the census about to be taken, and to make them a legal tender in the amount of twenty dollars for all debts; providing for the free coinage of silver; proposing a penalty of $1,000 to be imposed upon any National Bank for each officer in refusing to receive or pay out the standard silver dollars the same as other lawful money; providing for the circulation of National Bank notes of less than five dollars after resumption, the same as before; to abolish the Bureau of Military Justice. THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, DEC. 24, 1878

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Dec. 19, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

I suppose every one knows Dr. Mary Walker, but for the benefit of any of your readers who may not have the pleasure, I will explain that he—no, she—well then, it is a wholly unprecedented compound of feminine name with masculine habiliments. To say that it is a strong minded creature would be putting the matter too mildly. Dr. Mary is a roarer. It is always stared at and hooted when it appears on the street, and not without reason, for it wears a Derby hat, a coat with a short or bob-tail rear attachment, a pair of unmistakable pantaloons, and a gold headed cane. Once in a while it has even more unpleasant experiences than being hooted and stared at. For example, it arrived in town the other day from Washington, which unhappy capital forms its usual haunt, and going to a hotel demanded lodging. Now a hotel clerk is commonly supposed to be equal to any ordinary emergency, but this was a staggerer. The young man gasped and stammered, but eventually managed to inquire after the sex of his would be guest. This rash question drew down on his devoted head a storm of indignant abuse from the irascible "Dr.," which threatened to overwhelm him, but he finally rallied and succeeded in steering his nondescript out of the building. Before it could get to another hotel, it was gently collared by a policeman, who probably thought he had captured the original "What is it?" and led into a neighboring police station, whence it was shortly afterward liberated, and immediately sought the Windsor, followed by an enthusiastic crowd of ragmuffins. Here again it was gently but firmly "bounced" and finding all its efforts to be recognized as a man and brother futile, gave it up for the moment and disappeared.

The next morning, however it reappeared to public view under the escort of a policeman, who, this time, conducted his mysterious prize to Superintendent Watlings office to get its status officially defined, and learn his own duty in the premises. The Superintendent, who is the most gallant of men, listened patiently to the voluble lamentation of his erratic prisoner, and then slowly guessing, from the length of its tongue, that it must be a woman, said "Madam, I think you have not committed any offence against the laws. The wearing of clothes is a matter of taste, so long as they are not used for purposes of disguise. No policeman has a right to investigate your trousers, or your petticoats." And then triumphant, at last, Dr. Mary Walker walked.

"Little Phil," Sheridan would rather I have no doubt, be attacked with sabre and cannon than with red tape and law books, but he meets the latter as bravely as the former. A very important suit is now pending against him in the Caroult Court here, growing out of a claim made on him for something like half a million of dollars for seizing somebody's cotton plantation down in Louisiana during the war. I dropped into the court room the other afternoon and found it crowded with notabilities. The gallant General was present in person, looking cool enough, but a little as though he would liked a chance to ride at the head of his own cavalrymen into the ranks of the other side, which is marshaled in this instance by his old companion in arms, General Ben. Butler, who was the cynosure of all eyes. I am afraid Benjamin never was very pretty, and he certainly don't seem to improve in looks very rapidly. He has grown enormously corpulent, so that he waddles most absurdly, and has lost all signs of a neck; and as he prances heavily about before the bar, keeping one of those terrible optics on the jury, while the other steadily intimidated the witness he was examining, he looked more like a great bag turtle than any thing else I can think of. The trial promises to be a long one.

Col. Mapleson, the celebrated London impresario, at present giving Italian Opera here, with "Her Majesty's" opera troupe, will, I fear, soon be ready to shake off the dust of this "blarsted" country and quit our shores forever. First, he has embroiled himself with the directors of the Academy of Music, and got that august body not only down on him, but into a row among themselves. Then he has sought to compel the fat and indolent Minnie Hauk to sing at his "soiree" concerts on Sunday evening, threatening fines and imprisonment as the penalty of her refusal, but has only succeeded in getting himself thoroughly snubbed by the press and public for his pains. Several other little unpleasantnesses have also arisen in connection with his alleged partnership with ticket speculators; and, to crown all, he has been arrested at the instance of the Society for the Prevention of cruelty to children, for introducing a ballet danced by little girls. This last straw has pretty nearly broken the camel's back. The noble Briton, almost exploding with indignation, denounces the proceedings as "a most high handed hentrage, you know," and would like to have the Earl of Beaconsfield declare war with the Yankees at once. However, the Colonel has got a good troupe, and is making money so fast out of these same Yankees, that he will perhaps swallow his rage and continue to favor us.

And apropos of the S. F. P. C. C., that somewhat officious organization has again distinguished itself this week by interfering to stop the exhibition, by its parents, of a baby eight months old, weighing just one pound. This exhibition has attracted crowds for several weeks, and don't seem to have damaged the interesting infant; but the feelings of the Society were outraged, so it arrested the parents and ruthlessly cut off the yield of their bonanza, with about as much reason as that other busybody, Mr. Anthony Comstock of the "Society for the Suppression of Vice," lately forced a picture owner to take out of his window a copy of Hans Makart's magnificent historical painting, "Christ in the Pilate's Entry in to Antwerp," on account of some partially nude figures which it contains. Such "Jacks in office" are an annoying nuisance.

A cheerful state of things in a court of justice is now being uncovered in the impeachment trial of Justice Walter S. Pinckney, of one of the City Police Courts. The evidence clearly establishes the fact, well known to all frequenters of his court room, that Justice Pinkney has for a couple of years or more been an habitual drunkard, frequently absenting himself from his post for weeks together, and very often holding court when too drunk to stand, or to compre hend what was going on. It has also been testified, that he has frequently rendered openly corrupt judgments, taken bribes, backmailed subordinates, and, in short, done about everything which a man in his position could do to lay himself open to impeachment and imprisonment. He has even been arrested on the street for disorderly conduct, and locked up over night. This sort of thing has been going on for many months, and yet this incompetent drunkard has been permitted to keep on his disgraceful way, hindering justice and drawing a salary almost as large as that of a United States Supreme Court Judge. Even now during his trial he continues to hold court after his usual style. If any one asks why this is thus I shall be obliged to give it up. Perhaps we shall find out before Pinckney's trial is ended. RADIX.

An effort is being made to remove the county seat of Ionia county to Portland. The citizens of Portland offer to build $40,000 worth of county buildings if the change can be made.

Events at the opening of the present session of Congress indicate that the Republican party was never better united and equipped for agressive action than it is now.

Governor Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, had his leg amputated, and was elected United States Senator in one day last week.

Political.

A Christian Republican, General Grant declined to be knighted by the King of Portugal, the other day.

The Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette says that Senator Conkling announces himself as irrevocably for Grant for President in 1880.

The Democratic Vicksburg Herald claims that Hayes is always tangled up in by his endeavor to be a friend of the South and a good Radical at the same time.

The line of Republican Governors of Pennsylvania has been unbroken for 20 years.

Wade Hampton, ex-rebel, is believed to have got control of the South Carolina Legislature, and to have made himself Governor when he was not elected, by the bribery of Republican members. He will reap his reward by going to the Senate, when Smalls, the ex slave, for taking a bribe, goes to the penitentiary.

Senator Bruce says Grant would be the choice of nine tenths of the Republicans of the South.

A Washington letter to the Cleveland Herald says President Hayes is one of the best Grant men in the country, and would like to see him his successor as well as his predecessor.

The Democrats at Washington begin to put forth the doctrine that Sam Tilden is a private individual and, that if he sent and received cipher dispatches it's nobody's business.

Three happy candidates for the Senate from Wisconsin, Howe, Carpenter and Keyes, all certain of election.

"The longest way round is the shortest way home" is the title of a cartoon in the Graphic representing General Grant traveling around the globe on his way to the White House.

Col. Scott, President of the United States Senate, is duly recorded in the Parisian papers, as having arrived in Paris.

The Boston Post says the entire Democratic party is in favor of Grant as King of Bulgaria. This desire to do him honor by promoting him to high places in other lands, has been the leading desire of the Democratic party ever since the affair at Fort Dearborn. His operations then and subsequently during the war led them to regard him as a flourishing tool that they were anxious to see come to flaming maturity on another man's nose.

South Carolina now has two one-legged Senators. Butler got his shot off while fighting for the rebellion, while Hampton's was kicked off by a mule. History must decide which is the most honorable wound.

The Canucks gave the Marquis of Lorn and his wife a tolerably showy reception; but just wait till General Grant returns to "his own native land," if you want to see a big time.

Christine Nilsson is to be made Grand Mistress of the Evening Star, a ladies masonic lodge to which only the distinguished ladies ladies of Europe are admitted.

The Boston Herald says: "Beaconsfield plays whist." There was a suspicion at the Berlin Congress that he also took a hand at bluff occasionally.

The receipts of hogs at Chicago during last week were 261,107 head—the largest on record.

Boots are made on the Pacific coast with pockets in the tops for pistols.

Edward Stokes, the man who shot Jim Fiske, is a Nevada miner.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Chouteau, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

The Senate Electoral Count Bill.

The following is the bill introduced by Mr. Edmunds and passed by the Senate, on the 14th, making legal provisions for regulating the counting of the Electoral votes for President and Vice President:

A BILL to amend sundry provisions of Chap. 1, Title II of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to Presidential elections and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon.

It is enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the Electors of President and Vice President shall be appointed in each State on the first Tuesday in October in every fourth year succeeding the last election of a President and Vice President, and on the same day in those States where such law is necessary to bring the offices of President and Vice President declared elected and certified as hereinafter prescribed; but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

SEC. 2. Whenever three-fourths or more in number of both the offices of President and Vice President are entering more than two months next preceding the time fixed by law for the meeting of the Electors in any State, and there shall not then have been made in such State a choice of electors for either of such offices, then the executive authority of each State in which no choice shall have been made as aforesaid shall forthwith issue a notification that an election for electors for such State is appointed to be held on the day so fixed by law for the election of electors in the other States of the Union, and the executive authority of each State shall cause a sufficient number of copies of the list of the electors appointed in such State last before such election, certified by the executive authority, to be delivered to the electors appointed to act in such State at or before two o'clock afternoon of the day so fixed for their meeting.

SEC. 3. That if any State shall have failed to make a choice on the day prescribed by law for the election of electors, but shall afterward make such choice, the electors appointed in such State may perform the duties required of them by the Constitution and laws of the United States at any time before the time fixed by law for the meeting of the Electoral Colleges.

SEC. 4. That the electors of each State shall meet and give their votes on the second Monday in January next following their appointment, at such place in each State as the Legislature of such State shall direct.

SEC. 5. That if any State shall have provided by law for its ascertainment, by judicial or other means, of the fact of the appointment of electors in such State, and for the decision of all questions arising thereon, and for the final determination thereof at any time prior to the day appointed for the meeting of the Electors, in any manner in which the same shall be provided by such law, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on the day appointed for the meeting of the Electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution and in this act hereinafter provided.

SEC. 6. That on the second Monday in January next succeeding the meeting of the electors of a State, the Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of one o'clock in the afternoon on that day, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; and thereupon such State certificates as have been received before that hour, purporting to be certificates of the appointment of electors, or in case any State may have appointed electors in the manner provided by law as aforesaid, certificates of such appointment, and the papers accompanying the same, and purporting to be such certificates, and no others, shall be opened, commencing with the certificates from such States as shall have appointed electors in pursuance of such laws, and then proceeding with the certificates from States which have appointed electors in pursuance of the Constitution, if any such shall be received, and then proceeding with the certificates from States which have appointed electors by the action of the Executive thereof

Senator Conkling declares that he will not be a Republican Presidential candidate in 1880. He is in favor of Grant. This leaves the field, at present, with only Grant and Blaine conspicuously mentioned for the race, but with several other good men who may be brought forward hereafter, who have received more or less mention. It is clear that the current of Republican opinion, throughout the party, at the present time, is strong and unmistakable in favor of selecting for President in 1880 a nominee who is conspicuous for the great qualities of political and physical courage, or backbone, and who is noted as a man of strong and decided character and political convictions.

Post & Tribune.

The Metropolitan Republican Journal of Michigan.

The publishers of the Detroit Post and Tribune point to the record of journalistic enterprise and ability exhibited by them in the first year of the existence of the consolidated newspaper as the satisfactory evidence of the excellence of its claim upon the public confidence and support. The paper will continue to be the sincere, vigorous, and able advocate of the Republican political doctrine, of an honest and rational financial policy, and of state development.

Its large resources, its ample facilities in news gathering, its wide circulation, and its position as the metropolitan organ of the dominant party in its state enable its publishers to supplement promise by performance, and to fully meet the expectations of its patrons.

The news department of the Post and Tribune will be kept fresh, accurate and complete; the paper has control of the largest facilities for getting intelligence, foreign, domestic, state and local, and maintains special correspondents at all important points in Michigan, and at the main centers of news elsewhere.

Its compilations of State news and its commercial reports are well known for fullness and reliability.

Its editorial page discusses current issues candidly, and from the standpoints of accurate information, and of an adher ence to correct political and economic principles. All matters of public interest will receive from it the same intelligent and painstaking investigation which it has given this year the important phases of the currency question.

Its columns will be rich in miscellaneous reading matter, including sketches, poems, and selections from the current literature of the day. Especial care will be taken to keep the paper pure and elevated in tone.

One page of the Post and Tribune is devoted to matter prepared for the rural community, containing discussions of questions of interest in practical agriculture, letters on farm and home topics, recipes, etc.

New features will be added to the paper during 1879, and neither pains nor expense will be spared in keeping the Post and Tribune a

First-Class Family Paper.

Strong in all its departments, and in every way worthy of the great State with whose history and growth it has been so long and closely identified.

AT Roscommon Station, from the 7th to the 14th of December, the carcasses of three hundred and seventy deer were shipped to market by freight and express. Allowing a proportion for home consumption, this shows a slaughter of over four hundred deer within probably not much over one week. At this rate the deer of Michigan must soon become extinct. The Legislature will do well to make our game laws still more stringent, if this noblest of game is to be long preserved in our forests.

MR. BUTTARS'S new store is rapidly approaching completion, and will be ready for occupancy by the first of January. Mr. Buttars has the building, and will occupy it himself. He has been in business in Charlevoix for many years, and has a large trade, which he will undoubtedly increase in his new quarters.

THE Grand Rapids Democrat says: "Mr. Ferry, of Grand Haven, has introduced a bill in the Legislature to prohibit the sale of liquor in that city. Mr. Ferry is a prohibitionist, and has a right to be, but he is not a wise man. Prohibition is a failure, and the sooner the people realize it the better."

DEATH OF MRS. MARY ANN BOYNTON.—Mrs. Boynton died at the residence of her son, Mr. Wm. Boynton, in Charlevoix, on Thursday, December 26th, 1878, aged 72 years. Mrs. Boynton was born in Vermont, and was married to Mr. Boynton in 1826. They moved to Michigan in 1836, and settled in Ypsilanti. Mr. Boynton died in 1875. Mrs. Boynton has been a resident of Charlevoix for the past two years. She was a kind mother, a good neighbor, and a consistent member of the Methodist Church. She was buried on Saturday, December 28th, from the Methodist Church, Rev. Mr. Blake officiating.

THE MASQUERADE.—The Masquerade party held on Wednesday evening last under the auspices of the Charlevoix Cornet Band was in all respects one of the most successful affairs ever held in this place. The costumes were many and varied. Upon the floor engaged in the "mazes" could be seen the Dutch Grandma, and the Carmelite Nun; the Chinaman and the dusky African; the white surpliced clergyman and the striped and spangled circus clown; the Catholic priest and his protestant brother; the feathered knight and the Spanish Don. There were several expensive costumes on the floor.

THE growing importance of Charlevoix as a trading center is attributable more to the business character of its merchants than to any other cause. Charlevoix has a business firm whose remarkable success is due solely to its merits as an enterprising and square dealing business house, Carpenter & Bartholomew have built up a trade here of broad proportions, and are still extending it. They deserve their success. See their new advertisement.

BADLY USED INDIAN.—On Tuesday morning last, at a very early hour, and during the severe storm that prevailed an Indian with pony and "pung" drove down the hill and onto the bridge with the traditional nonchalance of his race. As he occupied the "Canada" end of the bridge the fastenings became loose and the wind swung the bridge upon its pivots holding the discomfited aboriginal in a lonely captive for a space of two or three hours, exposed to the extreme cold, and the searching wind. His agonies for help finally brought Henry Aldrich to the spot, who managed to get the bridge closed, after considerable exposure to his own person. The Indian after being rescued was found to be badly chilled, and scarcely able to help himself to a house.

TEN years ago this coming spring the firm of A. Buttars & Co., opened the mercantile establishment in this place which bears the firm name of Fox, Rose & Buttars. Mr. Buttars has, during the entire period, been the managing man of the institution, and his business tact and popularity have been a tower of strength to the institution. They carry a large stock of general merchandise and their large trade increases annually. They have a new advertisement in this issue.

GEN. Alpheus L. Williams, Representative in Congress from the Detroit District in this State, died in Washington Saturday the 21st. Gen. Williams was born in Connecticut, Sept 27th, 1810; graduated from Yale College in 1831; studied law, and removed to Detroit in 1836, where he has since resided. He was Lieut. Col. of the 1st Regt Mich. Vols. in the Mexican war, and was made a Brigadier General by President Lincoln soon after the breaking out of the late rebellion. He was elected to Congress by the Democrats in 1874, and again in 1876. He was a candidate again last fall, but was defeated by John S Newberry, Republican.

General News Summary.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—SECOND SESSION.

THE Senate, on the 17th, insisted upon its amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill, and a Conference Committee was appointed. The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was amended and passed. A bill awarding prize money was made on the bill to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in Iowa. Mr. Blaine's resolution respecting the Constitutional rights of citizens was then taken up, and, after defining the amendment authorizing the committee to visit any portion of the country, when such visit may, in their judgment, be vitally the subject of the inquiry, was agreed to without division. The resolution as amended was then further debated and finally passed—yeas, 38; nays, 6—the negatives votes being Messrs. Cockrell, McCreery, Morgan, Walker and White. The House resolution for a holiday recess was amended, so as to fix the recess from Dec. 21 to Jan. 7, and passed as amended. In the House, after the introduction and reference of bills, the bill appropriating $50,000 for the deficiency in the appropriation for the Postal-Mail Service, and protecting any increase of the Postal Service during the pending year, was considered in Committee of the Whole, and a short debate ensued, after which the bill was reported to the House and passed.

In the Senate, on the 18th, the House bill giving twenty cadetships each to the Cadet Academy at West Point was passed, as was also the House bill appropriating $50,000 to pay the recent expenses of the Yellow Fever Investigating Committee. The bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs to amend the three concluding clauses of the Army Appropriation bill for the present year, so as to provide that it shall not be construed to apply to any part of the army, or any person or persons engaged in the protection of life and property in the Southern and Territorial districts to which insurrection was amended so as to name the States of Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Oregon and Nevada, and the Territories subject to such insurrection, and the bill was then passed. Committees of Conference were ordered on the Consular and Diplomatic and the Fortification Appropriation bills. The Pension Appropriation bill was passed without material amendment. In the House the senate amendment extending the census from Oct. 1 to Dec. 1 was concurred in. The bill appropriating $50,000 for the expenses of the Committee on Yellow Fever Epidemics was passed. The Senate amendments to the Fortification and Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation bills were non-concurred in. The Indian Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole. A joint resolution was passed extending until the 15th of February the time within which the Joint Committee on the Transfer of the Indian Bureau may report. Bills were introduced—giving jurisdiction to the District and Circuit Courts of Kansas over the Indian Territory, for the improvement of the Yellowstone National Park.

A BILL was introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 19th, to reimburse several States for moneys loaned on the war loan, and for other purposes. The House bill appropriating $450,000 for the transportation of mails by railroads was passed. The bills to amend the Act to and for the reorganization of the Army were taken up in consideration. A joint resolution extending the time for the Joint Commission on the Transfer of the Indian Bureau was passed. The Select Committee to inquire whether the Constitutional rights of citizens were violated in the recent elections, in accordance with the House resolution, was then announced as follows: Senate—Messrs. Conkling, Wadleigh, Kirkwood, Bayard, Pinkney, Blaine, Wallace, Bailey and Garland. House—Messrs. Wallace and Plumb added to the Committee on the part of Messrs. Hoar and McMillan were appointed in their stead. A message was received from the President relative to the postal and commercial intercourse between the United States and South America. In the House, J. D. Young took the seat lately vacated by the death of J. M. Leonard, of the Fifth Louisiana District. The Indian Appropriation bill was considered and amended in Committee of the Whole, reported to the House and passed. Several private bills were read and unanimously adopted, that an investigation into charges made against certain members of the House, that they received money for aiding in the passage of the bill giving to the Government of interest on the Salt District bonds, had shown that there was a portion of the testimony to sustain the charges, and that the publication of the same in the Washington Post was a wilful and wholly unjustifiable attack on members of the House.

In the Senate, on the 20th, the bill introduced by Mr. Beck to repeal Sec. 820 of the Revised Statutes, which disqualifies all persons compromised with the Rebellion from serving on Grand or Petit juries in United States Courts, was called up and a motion was made and carried to go into Executive session—2 to 38—the Vice-President giving his vote in the affirmative. After the Executive session the bill was passed. Adjourned to Jan. 7. In the House, bills were passed—removing the political disabilities of certain persons; Senate bill authorizing the payment of the State of Tennessee for keeping United States military prisoners. A communication was received and referred from Secretary Sherman, in answer to a resolution of inquiry, stating that there were no balances on hand on accounts standing to the credit of the United States Treasury in any National Bank from March, 1878, to Jan. 1878. Adjourned to Jan. 7.

DOMESTIC.

A FIRE in the business center of St. Louis, Mo., on the night of the 17th, destroyed property valued at $500,000. Among the sufferers were Jaccard & Co., jewelers, Powell & Co., carpet dealers, and Alexander, druggist.

ON being informed, on the 18th, that gold had again operated at par with greenbacks in New York, Secty Sherman remarked to a newspaper correspondent that this was to be expected, and said he did not believe gold would again be above par with the amount of gold on hand and the near approach of the time for paying it out, and he thought it quite possible for a premium, however small, to exist. He thought that, within a short time, greenbacks would be at a very slight premium above gold, owing to their greater convenience.

THE banking-house of C. F. Adae & Co., at Cincinnati, Ohio, suspended, on the 18th. Liabilities, $750,000. The depositors were mostly Germans.

SEC'Y SHERMAN has issued a call for $10,996,100, being the rest and residue of the bonds outstanding under the act of March 3, 1865, consols of 1865, not included in former calls.

PATRICK HOURKE and his family of five children were burned to death in the City of Cohoes, N. Y., on the night of the 18th.

On the 18th, Secty Sherman addressed the payment of coupon interest on the public debt falling due Jan. 1, 1879, without rebate, and in coin or currency as the holder may desire.

On the 20th, the St. Louis bridge was sold at auction for $2,000,000, to a gentleman representing the English bondholders.

THE Indianapolis Savings Bank was forced into liquidation, on the 20th, by the Auditor of State. The usual promise to pay in full is made.

GEORGE W. DUPREE, State Printer of Louisiana, and proprietor of the New Orleans Democrat, was indicted for fraud, on the 20th. He is charged with having overcharged the State $13,000.

THE Secretary of the Treasury, on the 21st, issued a circular to customs officers authorizing them to receive, after Jan. 1, United States notes, as well as gold coin and standard silver dollars, in payment of duties on imports.

A NEW YORK special of a recent date says Manchester superadeclared that the New Hampshire 2-cent law had proved a great success. A year ago the country towns were at the mercy of a horde of marauding vagrants, who dispelled property, threatened lives and spread terror in households. Now life and property are secure, women and children come and go in safety, and the old curse is almost entirely removed, without injury to any deserving poor.

AT Zanesville, Ohio, on the 21st, Dr. Heyl, convicted of grave-robbing, was sentenced to one year's imprisonment and in pay a fine of $1,000. Baton, his accomplice, was sentenced to four months' imprisonment, and to pay a fine of $100.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE yeas and nays on the passage, in the Senate, of the resolution of Senator Blaine providing for an investigation as to whether, at the recent elections, the Constitutional rights of any citizens were violated in any State, were as follows:

Yeas—Allison, Anthony, Armstrong, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Beck, Blaine, Booth, Burnside, Butler, Cameron (Pa.), Cameron (Wis.), Christiancy, Cockrell, Dyke, Conkling, Davis (Ill.), Davis (W.Va.), Dawes, Dennis, Eaton, Ferry, Garland, Gordon, Hamlin, Harris, Hereford, Howe, Ingalls, Jones (Fla.), Kernan, Kirkwood, McDonald, McMillan, McPherson, Matthews, Maxey, Merriman, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Rollins, Saulsbury, Sargent, Seeley, Teller, Voorhees, Wadleigh, Windom, Withers—56.

Nays—Eaton, Hill, McCreery, Morgan, Walker, White—6.

Messrs. Gloucester and Saulsbury said they were paired with Plumb and Conover upon political questions, but did not say how they would have voted on this resolution. Mr. Davis (Ill.) announced that if the Senator from Ohio (Thurman) were present, he would vote aye.

EX-PRESIDENT MORTON, of the Philadelphia Market Street Railway, and Sam R. Huhn, Secretary, have been sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in the Eastern Pennsylvania Penitentiary, having pleaded guilty to the charge of over-issuing the stock of the corporation.

JACK KEHOE, the "King of the Mollie Maguires," was hung at Pottsville, Pa., on the 18th, for the murder, in 1862, of a policeman whose name I cannot learn. At that time Kehoe belonged to a murderous organization known as the "Buckshots." Kehoe died of strangulation, and his death struggles were horrible.

A CALL has been issued for a conference of the Representatives of the National Greenback Party in New England, at Boston, on the 31st of January.

THE United States Senate Select Committee, appointed in pursuance of the House resolution, ratified for an inquiry as to whether the Constitutional rights of citizens in any States of the Union had been violated in the recent election, held a meeting in Washington, on the 20th. Present: Teller, Cameron (Wis.), Kirkwood, Bayard, Bailey and Garland. A resolution requesting of the President copies of documents and names of witnesses upon which he based his reference to the alleged election frauds mentioned in his annual message, was then read, amended and unanimously adopted, that an investigation into charges made against certain members of the House, that they received money for aiding in the passage of the bill giving to the Government of interest on the Salt District bonds, had shown that there was a portion of the testimony to sustain the charges, and that the publication of the same in the Washington Post was a wilful and wholly unjustifiable attack on members of the House.

THE Russian Minister, Baron Stoeckl, has been ordered to Washington to answer charges of fraud, and Mr. Catacazy, Russian Minister to the United States, has been ordered to St. Petersburg to answer charges of treason.

ACCORDING to St. Petersburg dispatches of the 20th, numerous Judeos denominations have been made in the streets of that city and Moscow by students stimulated by the various educational institutions. The Chiefs of Police ordered them to disperse, and, the disorder continuing, squadrons of soldiers were brought up, and from 150 to 200 of them were arrested and lodged in the Military Prisons.

THE German Tobacco Inquiry Commission has rejected the Government proposition to make the duties in tobacco a State monopoly.

A DISPATCH received in London, on the 23d, from Allahabad says that the Ameer had located at Balkh with the retiring Russian mission, and that there was utter anarchy in all the country between Jelalabad and Cabul.

ACCORDING to a St. Petersburg dispatch of the 23d the Government apprehended a Nihilist outbreak, and contemplated the closing of all the Universities in the Empire as a precautionary measure.

THE Princess Thyra daughter of the King of Denmark, was married to the Duke of cumberland, hereditary king of Hanover, on the evening of the 23d.

LONDON telegrams of the 22d say the reduction proposed of 12½ per cent. in wages at the collieries in South Yorkshire and North Derbyshire will affect 100,000 men. A plan to strike en masse was being considered.

ON the 22d, an express train on the Rostoff & Vladikokas Railway, in Russia, left an embankment. Twenty persons were killed outright, and thirty-six more or less severely injured. Among the killed were Gen. Hintz and several officers of the Army of the Caucasus.

THE funeral ceremonies of the late Bayard Taylor, United States Minister at Berlin, took place in that city, on the 23d. All the Ambassadors including the Chinese and Japanese, were present, as were also representatives of the Emperor and Crown Prince.

Locomotives Without Fire.

Machines on the above-named principle are now at work on the tramway from Rueil to Marly, near Paris, and have given satisfactory results. The system in use is one introduced by M. Francy, an engineer, and is based on the fact that water boils at a lower temperature proportional to the reduction of the atmospheric pressure. Most of our readers are aware that already water requires a heat of 212 deg. Fah. to boil at the level of the sea, a much lower temperature is sufficient to produce the same effect on the top of a mountain. We will now explain how that physiological fact is practically employed. Into a reservoir of thin steel—we cannot call it a boiler, for it has neither fireplace nor fire, is introduced 1,800 litres of water at a temperature of 400 deg. Fah., and then covered up hermetically. The steam it gives off at once fills the superincumbent space, and produces a pressure of fifteen atmospheres. As soon as the use of the vapor is turned on for moving the machine the pressure is reduced, and the water then begins to boil, producing a fresh supply of steam. Of course, that process is of but limited extent, as, at the commencement, the liquid only contained a certain amount of heat, which is gradually diminished as the reproduction of steam takes place in the proper quantities by the exhaustion of the superincumbent pressure. So far a machine of this description would be seriously totally inadequate to any very prolonged journey. But for short transits it has been found extremely serviceable. As the amount of pressure required towards the end of a run is only five atmospheres, a series of valves are so arranged as to prevent a greater amount of force issuing from the reservoir than is necessary, and thus retaining as far as possible the heat originally contained in the water. The driving part of the machinery is nearly identical with that of ordinary locomotives, with a few modifications, with the purpose of guarding against the useless waste of the heat originally introduced into the reservoir.—Galignani's Messenger.

—At a meeting of a colored literary society, known as the Watson Lyceum, in Wheeling, W. Va., the other night, the Chinese question was under debate. Two of the debaters, Alfred Carney and Joseph McCulloch, quarreled during the discussion, and McCulloch pulled his little razor and nearly hacked Carney to pieces with the weapon. Carney received about a dozen serious gashes about the head and face.

WINTER came in very Dec.-ently.

THE funeral obsequies of the late Bayard Taylor, United States Minister at Berlin, took place in that city, on the 23d. All the Ambassadors including the Chinese and Japanese, were present, as were also representatives of the Emperor and Crown Prince.

THE balance of cash in the State Treasury Dec. 7 was $1,000,000; receipts for the week ending Dec. 14 were $12,234.38; payments for same time, $10,412.17; leaving a balance Dec. 14, 1878, of $1,002,004.07; increase for the week, $1,822.21.

A BEAUTIFUL SCENTED critter, who calls himself a traveling man, made such a nuisance of himself by insubordinate flirtations, etc., at Fenton, that the boys put up a job on him, by allowing him to be drawn into a desperate flirtation, moonlight ramble, etc., with a 'bus driver disguised as a woman. The game was conspicuously public, and the drummer left town without even taking his "samples" with him.—Detroit News.

EUGENE CANFIELD, of West Leroy, was killed, the other afternoon, by the caving in of an old well from which he was removing bricks, in company with his uncle. He stood at the bottom of the well, and just as the last bucket was about to be drawn up by his uncle, the earth suddenly caved in from above and buried him in the well. Neighbors were called and prompt efforts made to save the unfortunate man, but when the debris was removed he was found dead, standing erect, with his face upturned.

GEORGE KIELER, a young man of Lee Township, in Calhoun County, was kicked in the breast by a horse, a few evenings ago, and instantly killed.

ARTHUR Jackson, on the morning of the 17th, partially destroyed the building occupied by A. H. Brown as a grocery, by Bale & Nelson, grocers, and Zeck & Stein, tobacconists. Loss, $9,540.

A STRANGE and fatal cattle disease has broken out in East Saginaw.

THE Deputy Auditor-General of Michigan next year will be a lady—Miss Emma J. Latimer, niece of Gen. Latimer, the Auditor.

ON the 19th, the passenger-train due at Plainwell at 6:05, on the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railway, struck a cutter driven by John McIntire, and containing himself, wife, and three children, at Izaak's Crossing, three miles north of Plainwell, killing McIntire instantly and fatally injuring his wife and one child.

THE body of Cornelius Bassford was found in the road, near Benton Harbor, the other day. It was warm when found, and had $300 in the vest pocket. The Coroner's jury thought the man died from apoplexy, and so found.

ON the 19th, the interior of Beckwith Block in Bay City, was destroyed by fire. Loss, about $15,000, of which the Daily Tribune lost $4,000.

A BEAUTIFUL SCENTED critter, who calls himself a traveling man, made such a nuisance of himself by insubordinate flirtations, etc., at Fenton, that the boys put up a job on him, by allowing him to be drawn into a desperate flirtation, moonlight ramble, etc., with a 'bus driver disguised as a woman. The game was conspicuously public, and the drummer left town without even taking his "samples" with him.—Detroit News.

EUGENE CANFIELD, of West Leroy, was killed, the other afternoon, by the caving in of an old well from which he was removing bricks, in company with his uncle. He stood at the bottom of the well, and just as the last bucket was about to be drawn up by his uncle, the earth suddenly caved in from above and buried him in the well. Neighbors were called and prompt efforts made to save the unfortunate man, but when the debris was removed he was found dead, standing erect, with his face upturned.

Death of Bayard Taylor.

There will be sorrow, universal and deep, in two hemispheres, at the announcement which comes this morning of the death of Bayard Taylor, which is reported to have occurred at Berlin, yesterday afternoon, at four o'clock. Perhaps no literary man who ever lived in this country was more widely known than Mr. Taylor. The mature men and women of to-day remember his travels abroad, as related in the New York Tribune years ago, and remember them as a part of their earliest and pleasantest studies. Not a few of the friends he made then have kept up the literary acquaintance through all his subsequent wanderings and successes.

Mr. Taylor, whose baptismal name was James Bayard, was born in Chester County, Pa., Jan. 11, 1825. If he had lived a few weeks longer he would therefore have attained the age of fifty-four. In early life he learned the printing business, and in 1844 began a two years' travel on foot in Europe, which he completed at an outlay of but $500. The story of his travels was subsequently published under the title of "Views Afoot; or, Europe Seen with Staff and Knapsack." His first book, published four years later, gained for the pain of gold. Fair men and women now are won by deeds of stating nobly done.

OLD ELSPA.

I was alone in the world, or I thought I was, which amounted to pretty much the same in its mental and moral effects. My mother died when I was so young that I had only a shadowy remembrance of a pale face and a long, last clasp to her loving heart. I had been my father's pet and darling until now he was dead, too, and his will had consigned me, just like a bale of goods, to the care and guardianship of his brother, a doctor, whose home lay among the picturesque mountains of Cumberland.

I was "too impulsive," said the will, and would "throw myself and my money away before I knew the value of either, if I had no one to take care of me," and so, when my poor father died in the south of France, where we had gone to winter, Uncle Ellison who came down in his coach to bring me to foreign grave, carried me off at once to his house on the bleak hillside, gave me a kiss as he lifted me out of the stuffy vehicle which had conveyed us from the station, presented me to my aunt and cousins with a "Well, here's Adela!" and told me to consider myself "at home."

OLDEN TIMES AND PRESENT.

Ancient days, ancient days,
Tottering, tall and old,
Locks of hair and beauty bold,
Thrilling days, those days of old,
Beaux' lovers and their plighted troth,
Times with fashion's rage,
Home-brings closed and wooing grave,
Business hampers and intent,
Modest sedate and gay,
Trousseau and jointure bond,
Single, legal death and grave,
Sepulchral wedding bell,
The liar deck, the days of old,
Far holes fair and warfare bold.

Real a pageant upon us,
In all her pride of chivalry;
Armed knights on chargers gay,
Warrior eager for the fray,
Banished him and glittering lance,
In the golden sunshine glance,
Parting words from lady fair,
Tress of dark or golden hair,
Lady on step, a waves token,
Knight and squire, and trumpet sound,
The knight depart for field of France,
In war his fair lady's hand to hand.

Gone those days and peasantry,
Valor and knight-errantry,
Only battle, and of life,
Race for wealth, the keenest strife,
Love and Fashion's mad career sold,
Bartered for the gain of gold,
Fair men and women now are won

—A strange history has been brought to light by the recent death of Sarah Coffrin, a lonely and mysterious character, at Lonely. Over twenty years ago, while living in a happy home at Waterbury, she married a dissipated fellow named William, against the wishes of her parents, and soon after he deserted her and went West. She also disappeared, and her friends supposed she had followed her husband. Instead of doing so, however, she went to Essex and lived in solitude and obscurity, refusing to divulge the secret of her home and relatives till she died, and now for the first time her friends have learned of her whereabouts.

agitation that I fully comprehended the danger I had escaped. I think her motherly concern made me more communicative than usual.

We were still speaking of Elspa when my uncle came in.

"Ah!" said he, as Winnie helped him off with his overcoat. "Ah! my dear, you might thank your stars Elspa was on the mountain-side. I dare say she had followed you. The old Scotchwoman is shrewd and far-seeing; she has turned her eighty years' experience to account, has a good practical knowledge of common ailments and curative simples. I should lose my own credit or I might do worse than take her as an assistant!" and he laughed. "Then she can read character with any physiognomist in the world, and the silly folk think her prophetic, when she is only clear-eyed."

I think uncle was using an invisible probe. I know I colored, and he laughed again, but said nothing,—nor did I.

The excitement was not all been on my account. Bella had received an invitation to spend some months with a newly-married friend in London, and Cousin Edward Winnie was in high glee. Even aunt acknowledged it was "a chance not to be missed, if possible," and Lassie was glorious partly in Uncle Ritson's face, which I fancied was graver than usual. Still, possibilities were not discussed in our presence. It was not until I had retired to my own pretty room for the night, that I overheard the sisters discussing the problem between them, and the partition between the head of my bed and theirs.

I found that money—or its scarcity—stood in the way, and heard the chances of the matrimonial market calculated with a balance greatly in favor of London.

Misery! How I hated the word! I would have given every shilling I possessed to be assured that Edgar Neville was true to me, and would seek me out when the period of probation prescribed by my father was gone by. But where could he search for me? Correspondence had been forbidden. He knew not my address, and my father had withheld Edgar's from me. Ah, how he repented before he died! How glad he would have been to have left me in those strong, protective arms!

I soon bridged the monetary difficulty over in spite of my uncle's opposition, and I think I showed something of my old self in the spirit with which I entered into the needful preparations for Miss Ritson's launch on the sea of London society, little thinking what might be the issue of it all.

It was May when she went. I suggested that she should lighten her mourning, being about to visit a bride and bridegroom before ye! That my pretty lavender bonnet set off her face much better than her heavy crape. She kissed me, and, looking before she got into the gig beside her father, to be driven to the

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Dec. 26, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

The year just drawing to a close will be memorable, even if for no other reason, on account of the remarkable agitation of the sugar question which has been in progress for many months, and is now at its height. Through recent developments the subject has been forced upon the whole public, and has become of such immediate personal interest to every consumer of the article named, that I propose to devote this letter to its consideration. This whole agitation has grown out of what I may call a blow in the dark at the sugar refining interest of this country, an industry the magnitude and importance of which will probably surprise most of your readers when I give, a little further on, some of the statistics regarding it. For months past successive articles have appeared in several of the city newspapers about refined sugars. They were mysterious productions. Nobody wrote them, and they mentioned no names, but they were all of one drift. They hinted darkly at a horrible state of things among the refiners; at gigantic and systematic frauds on the revenue, and a terrible conspiracy to destroy the American nation by means of insidious poisons introduced as adulterations into almost all the sugar sold in this market. At first these oracular utterances produced little effect. Those who understood the subject smiled as they read them, and the rest of the town paid them only a momentary attention. But they were continued, and at length, as they were copied more or less through the country, the result sought by the ambushed Unknown began to show itself in scattering expressions of public alarm. The ball thus set rolling has gone on, as such balls are apt to do, growing in size and momentum until, as I am credibly informed, the consumption of refined sugar has fallen off nearly one-half.

The sugar refining houses in this country are not very numerous, perhaps fifteen or twenty in number, but they employ a capital aggregation some fifty millions of dollars, refine about one billion six hundred million pounds of sugar a year, and furnish the means of subsistence, directly and indirectly, to at least one hundred and fifty thousand people. They buy and use in a year thirty million pounds of bone-back, three hundred thousand tons of coal, thirty thousand car loads of barrel staves, eighteen thousand kegs of nails, and other materials in proportionate quantities. They have in the last ten years introduced improvements into the process amounting almost to a revolution of the business, and have made American refined sugars cheaper and better, grade for grade, than any others in the world. The question then naturally arises, who can desire the ruin of such an American industry, and what is their object in seeking it? An interesting column might be written in answering that query, but I must confine myself to a much briefer reply.

Most of the raw sugar used in our refineries comes from Cuba. The duties in the present tariff, although large, (amounting to $35,000,000 a year,) are practically ad valorem, and under them the refiner is able to import and work up the lower grades which furnish the various most yellow sugars—seven to eight cents a pound—which from the bulk of our domestic consumption in these economical times. A change in the tariff, substituting for the flexible ad valorem scale a uniform specific duty on all these low grades of raw sugar, would instantly stop their importation, reduce our refinery interest to the condition of the stranded hulk of a noble vessel, and transfer nearly the whole of its business to Cuban hands. Does not this fact furnish motive enough for the attack? But who is there who would make such an attack and for such a purpose? In view of what I have just said, who indeed, unless it be the Cubans themselves? But again, how could a Cuban or any number of Cubans have the effrontery to hope for success in asking the Congress of the United States to practically crush out and industry standing sixth in importance in the American list, and to put up the price of one of the common necessaries of life, all for the benefit of a Spanish colony? Of course they could not, were they to appear in person and avow their object. Then how can their agency in this serious agitation be shown? That might have been a difficult question months ago, but it is not so much so now.

About the time of the first appearance of the newspaper articles above referred to, the same doleful tale of fraud and adulteration was poured into the ear of Congress, together with an application for just the change of tariff which I above described. The whole matter was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, a sub-committee of investigation from which sat in this city in September, and heard considerable testimony, including that of the Appraiser of the Port, several refiners and others. Out of all the witnesses examined, just three sisted upon the truth of the charges. Two of these, Messrs. Fuller and Hewett, were particularly bitter and emphatic in their denunciation of the sugar refiners, and the former sought to give extra weight to his invective by stating his own business to be refining. In the course of the examination, however, it came out that Mr. Fuller had been entirely out of that branch of the business for nearly two years, and that he and his ally are junior partners in the large Cuban sugar-houses of Aldama & Fuller and Ceballos & Co., respectively. The third of the accusing trio, a gentleman for many years generally respected in New York City, had, indeed, been a sugar refiner, but had made a disastrous failure only a few months previous, and his violent and incoherent speech before the committee was so wild as to indicate an intellect unsettled by misfortune. It is more than probable that the gentlemen named have been among the most prominent in causing the present state of things. The application to Congress and the testimony just referred to, point plainly to that conclusion, and when, some little time ago, I asked an acquaintance, who is on the editorial staff of an influential daily in which several articles against the refiners appeared, how his paper came to publish such stuff, he replied that he didn't know much about it himself, but believed the information was furnished by a man named Fuller. The whole movement is simply an attempt to use an American cat's-paw to pull Cuban chestnuts out of the fire. If further proof of this assertion is desired, it may be found in the following extract from an address recently delivered by a member of the largest wholesale grocery house in America:

"I might mention in this connection that when I was in Liverpool recently a friend of mine in the sugar trade there mentioned to me that he understood from Cuban sources that our tariff would undoubted be altered to a specific tariff on sugar this winter, which would give great advantage to refiners of sugar in Cuba; that he had been solicited to take an interest in sugar manufacture there on that ground. At that time I paid little attention to the subject. I had not heard of the violent agitations of the matter on this side of the water. On my arrival home, however, I put the two things together, and the result to me is somewhat significant."

I have devoted so much of my letter to exposing the sources and motives of the stories which have so alarmed the people, believing this to be the shortest and surest method of breaking their force, and reassuring any of your readers who may have been affected by them. The charge as I mentioned at the outset, are fraud on the Government, and adulteration, but it is the latter only of which I intended to speak particularly. It is my firm belief that both are practically groundless. There may be some spark of fire under this great volume of smoke in regard to undervaluations in importing, in which the fraud is alleged to consist; but the charge of adulteration is simply false—a story trumped up for the purpose of setting public opinion against the refiners, and thus facilitating the passage of the Cuban job through Congress. The only substances, so far as I know, which the refiners are accused of putting into their sugars are plaster-of-Paris, grape sugar, and some mineral containing zinc, though the writers of the mysterious article usually prefer more dangerous sounding names, and call the plaster "gypsum," the grape sugar "glucose," and speak of the "chloride" or "muriate" of tin as frequently as possible. Some one has lately said that the public is so like a great baby, in the case with which it can be frightened, that were some one to come forward and proclaim in a solemn voice that the bakers were putting carbonic acid in their bread, many people would be almost scared to death; and without intending the slightest disrespect to that portion of the public which forms your constituency, I must say that I endorse his remark. If anybody fears that his sugar contains plaster, he can very easily settle the question by dissolving a spoonful of it in a glass of water, and seeing if a white sediment remains undissolved. No less an authority than Prof. Chandler, president of the Board of Health of this city, states that he has tested samples of refined sugar bought at a number of retail groceries without finding a particle of this mineral, or of any other adulteration. The "glucose" scare is simply absurd. This substance occurs naturally in all cane-juice, and in boiling down the latter great care has to be taken not to produce it in large quantities. It is perfectly harmless, and is eaten or drunk by all of us almost every day of our lives. It is, however, less sweet than cane sugar, and every difficult to crystallize. A refiner would be very foolish to use it, not because it is hurtful, but because it render his sugars inferior, in appearance and flavor. As to the use of tin in this connection, one fact is sufficient to send that fable into the dust-heap along with the others, and this is that any form of the mineral which has been alluded to by the alarmists, costs nearly twice as much per pound as the best sugar.

When I add that all the reputable refiners in the city have given the most unequivocal denial in general and in particular to these charges of adulteration, I think I have said enough to convince any reasonable man that he may continue to enjoy the sweets of life without fear of being turned into a plaster image, acquiring a tin-lined stomach, or falling a victim to the fell destroyer—glucose.

RADIX.

Personal and Political,

P. T. Barnum is working for the next Senatorship from Connecticut, and claims, as always, to have a better show than anybody else.

The Council Bluffs Nonpariel says the Blaine movement is booming in Iowa, and that the Republicans of that State thoroughly endorse his speech.

Victoria objected to Lorne's coming to Canada with Lorne, but the good woman insisted that her place was with her husband.

Vice President Wheeler is commended for the quiet, firm, courteous and dignified manner in which he enforces the rules of the Senate.

A former tutor of the Marquis of Lorne says there is not a more industrious woman in England than the Princess Louise.

Col. Bob Ingersoll and Postmaster Key had a significant political interview the other day. According to the Memphis Herald, they were discussing whether a hog that grunts and squeals will fatten as rapidly as one that feeds in quiet.

Five editors will decorate the next Illinois legislature.

The Washington Post says "Blaine and Edmunds have to count noses now before they start a political debate in the Senate" The inference is, that if red noses predominate the debate is postponed.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. CROUTER, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—The sexton of Dagenham Parish, Essex, in England, was buried alive while digging a grave.

—A carpenter of Lisdoonvarra, County Clare, Ireland, has just met his death in a curious manner. He was riding on a bicycle and was upset. He fell on a chisel and was so badly wounded that he died by the roadside.

An exchange says: "Kind words are better than gold." Well, they may be for some purposes, when you want to choke off a bill collector with a heavy under jaw, gold's the best. Such men don't run to sentiment much. —Bridgeport Standard.

—A brakeman, the other day, "for the fun of the thing," threw a lump of coal at an Italian image vender's collection as the train rushed through the Springfield (Mass.) depot, and almost ruined the poor man's stock in trade. The Italian was sharp enough to take the number of the car on which the brakeman was riding, and he reported his grievance to the railroad officers. The matter was investigated, and the brakeman was abruptly discharged.

—An eager and unknown young man called upon a clergyman in Warren, R. I., a few days ago, and said he wished him to marry him to a young lady later in the day, and had set his heart upon five dollars as the fee that he should pay for the important service; but, unfortunately, he had but three dollars, and would like to borrow two dollars of the clergyman to put in the envelope with it. The clergyman was sparingly wise, and the youth went away without the two dollars. And he did not come back to be married.

—Frank H. Swartz, of West Kansas, died last evening. On Wednesday last he was bitten by a carrion fly on the left corner of the mouth. His blood was poisoned, and a disease known as "charbon" ensued. The theory of the case is that the fly had been sucking the juices of some diseased animal or carrion, and inoculated the sore with the poison. His face and head swelled to an enormous size, and his face became discolored—black and purple. On Thursday night he became insensible, and last night he died.—Kansas City (Mo.) Times.

—Not long since, a widow living in Virginia received $3,500. She took it to a prominent stock broker and asked his opinion as to how best to invest it for the money. She was told to buy Sierra Nevada, then selling at $200, and Mexican at $90, and did so. In the declines which followed immediately thereafter she was called upon for more money, but was unable to respond. She had, however, some rare diamonds, which she had saved from a high estate maintained by her husband, and invested in an equity of property on the Comstock, and these she gave in keeping to the broker, and felt easy. During the late crash she was again called on for more margins, and being still unable to comply with the request, was sold out. She had lost her $3,500 and her diamonds, which are now worn by the broker's wife. There is no romance in the foregoing, but rather an instructive reality, and but one of many such now existing on the Comstock.—Gold Hill (Nev.) News

Don't Fret or Worry Your Pupils.

Many years ago I left Lake George for Saratoga Springs. There were three heavily-loaded Concord coaches, each drawn by four horses, and the distance to the nearest station on the railroad was about twelve miles. It was my good fortune to secure a seat beside the driver of the leading coach; the other two immediately following us. The coaches were sufficiently near each other to enable me to observe something of the habits of the different drivers. He by whose side I sat was a quiet, kind and gentlemanly man. He used no boisterous words, uttered no oaths, had no slashing of the whip. If any horse was not doing his proper share of the work, he managed to touch him with the whip in such a manner that the other horses of the team neither heard nor felt the blow. So the entire distance was passed over without any shouting, swearing, or whipslashing.

With the other two drivers it was different. They whipped, and shouted, and swore, and their teams were kept constantly annoyed and excited. The three coaches arrived at the same destination within five minutes of the same time. The horses of the leading coach appeared as fresh and quiet as though they had not traveled a mile. But not so with the others. They came to the end of their route puffing and foaming. The difference was entirely owing to the fact that the leading team was kindly driven, and in no way worried, while the others were whipped, excited and fretted at almost every step.

It occurred to me that there was the same difference in teachers that there was in these drivers. The tasks to be performed may be all the same, but some teachers will secure their performance in that quiet and kindly manner which makes it seem pleasant; while others, by their harshness and rigid exactions and severe words, will continually annoy and worry their pupils, and so make all exercises irksome and unpleasant. The quiet and pleasant way need not be dull and lifeless, but may be equally energetic and effective with the noisy and harsh way, and far more satisfactory to all concerned. The teacher should not be merely a commander and driver, but he should be a kind leader and director, causing his pupils to feel that he is their friend, and thinking all requirements known in that gentle and winning way which it will be a pleasure to regard and fulfill. And if it shall be necessary to administer reproof or correction, that may be done in that gentle, private and kindly manner which will secure the desired results without awakening unkind or bitter feelings.—National Journal of Education.

Astronomical—1879.

As the coming year will be one of much interest to the amateur, as well as to the professional astronomer, a few words on the principal astronomical events of 1879 may not be uninteresting to many of your readers.

In eclipses, it must be admitted that the year could not well be more devoid of interest. There will be two eclipses of the sun, one on the 22d of January and the other on the 19th of July, both of which are annular, and neither of which is visible to this country. There will also be a slight eclipse of the moon Dec. 28, a part of which may be seen by the inhabitants of the Pacific Coast.

Vulcan—Too little is known as yet of this planet to hazard any conjectures concerning it. Doubts, indeed, have arisen in some quarters of the correctness of Prof. Watson's observation, as it has been shown that, according to his calculations, the planet should be seen on the face of the sun several times a year. Little doubt, however, is now felt as to the existence of one or more planets within the orbit of Mercury.

Mercury—At the beginning of the year will be in the morning sky, but, owing to its great southern declination, will not be easily seen. It will be visible for a few evenings toward the end of March, somewhat to the north of Venus and lower down. It may also be seen in the morning sky about the 9th of September, but cannot well be seen at any other of its periods of elongation.

Venus—Having passed its superior conjunction with the sun on Dec. 5, 1878, will become visible in the evening sky about the middle of January, and will be in conjunction with Jupiter on the 23d of that month, being about 1 deg. south of the latter at the time of setting, on that evening. The beauty of the scene will be enhanced by the presence of the new moon, which will be in conjunction with both planets on that day. Passing Saturn March 2, Venus will remain in the evening sky until Sept. 23, the date of inferior conjunction with the sun, but will scarcely be seen throughout September, owing to its southern declination, but will be bright in the morning sky during the remainder of the year.

Mars—Will be visible only as a morning star for the first half of the year. It will be in conjunction with Jupiter on the 9th of May and with Saturn on the 30th of June, being within eighty seconds of a degree of that planet. As this conjunction will occur in the afternoon, the two bodies, which would appear to the naked eye as one, will not be seen. Mars will arrive at opposition on the 12th of November, and though not so brilliant as in 1877, will blaze brightly in the evening sky during the latter part of the year. Its approaching sufficiently near the earth to render its satellites visible—a pamphlet on the motions of which may be obtained on application to the National Observatory.

Jupiter—Will come in opposition on the 31st of August in the constellation of Aquarius, being at its farthest point east nearly in line with the western side of the Square of Pegasus, and about equidistant from Mark 49 of that constellation and Fomalhaut. Being in a region devoid of bright stars, the great splendor of this planet will attract unusual attention.

Saturn—With the exception of the first month, this planet will be in Pisces throughout the year, coming in opposition on the 5th of October, being about two hours east of Jupiter. During the month of March this planet will pass into the Northern Hemisphere, where it has not shone for about fifteen years, and will be near the equinoctial during the year. Its ring system will not be very "open" this year, and can not well be seen without a good telescope.

Uranus—Will be in Leo, 4 or 5 deg. east of Regulus, during the year. It may be seen without a glass during February, if its exact position is known.

Neptune—Is in Aries, being in opposition on the 3d of November, and in conjunction with Mars, on the 16th of August, being near that planet during the latter part of the year. Neptune shines as a star of the eighth magnitude, and consequently is never seen without the telescope.—Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.

One of the very best preparations for repairing roads that leak is to procure coal tar at the gas works, and mix finely-sifted coal-ashes or road-dust with it till about as thick as mortar. Plaster with this carefully around leaky roof valleys or gutters, or about chimney flushings. It will soon set as hard as stone, and apparently as indestructible. This preparation is very cheap, and would probably answer equally well spread all over a roof previously laid with felt or roofing paper. Once put on properly, it would seem to be there for all time.—Prairie Farmer.

When Johnny was questioned as to why his engagement with Miss H. had been broken off, he rolled his eyes, looked very much pained, and groaned, "Oh! she turned out a deceiver." But he forgot to mention that he was the deceiver whom she had turned out.—Puck.

Punctuality begets confidence, and that gentle and winning way which it is the sure path to honor and respect.

A Good Father.

Dr. Graham having passed a very creditable examination before the Army Medical Board, was commissioned an Assistant Surgeon in the United States Army in 18—, and ordered to report for duty to the commanding officer at Fort McKavitt, Texas. There were no railroads in the Western country at that time, and the usual way of getting to Texas was by the Mississippi River to New Orleans, and then crossing the Gulf to stage it up through the State. Dr. Graham was very desirous of examining the Western country preliminarily, so applied and received permission from the War Department to go by way of Arkansas and the Indian Territory to his post.

On his arrival at St. Louis he shipped the greater part of his baggage by way of the river, and taking only what he could carry on horseback, started on his journey. While in St. Louis, at the Planters' Hotel, he formed the acquaintance of a gentleman, who, learning where he was going, gave him a letter of introduction to his brother, who was a farmer living on his route in Arkansas. It is not necessary for us to follow him on his road, or tell what discoveries he made in the interest of science; sufficient it is that one day, toward dusk, he reached the home of the gentleman to whom he had the letter, and, dismounting, knocked at the door and presented his letter to the Judge (even in those days Arkansas was ruled by definite ranks), who would not have needed it to have recorded him an open-handed welcome; for travelers were a good deal of a novelty in this section, and the latest news was as much sought after then as now. After a short visit, he proposed to go on to the next town, about four miles off, where he intended to put up for the night. The Judge would not listen to his leaving, and was so cordial in his desire for him to stay that he would have been rude not to have done so. The Judge, after directing one of the servants to attend to his horse, invited him into the dining-room, where he was introduced to the wife and daughter of the host, and the Judge's substantial Western supper, to which he did ample justice.

After supper they adjourned to the parlor, and he married the now unmade friends with the latest news from the outside world. The Judge brewed some stiff whisky punch, which Graham, socially inclined, imbibed quite freely. The old couple retired, and left their daughter to entertain him; and whether it was the punch or not, at all events he made hot love to her, and finally asked her to be his wife and go to Texas with him, to which she consented. She, being very unsophisticated and innocent, took everything he said in deepest earnest, and loved her it was a case of "love at first sight."

But I am anticipating. During the night our friend the doctor woke up, and remembered what he had said, and it worried him; but he said to himself, after emptying his water pitcher, "Never mind, I'll make it all right in the morning. I must have made a fool of myself. She's lovely, but what must she think of me?" and rolled over and went to sleep again. Morning came, and upon its going down to the parlor he found the young lady alone, for which he blessed his lucky stars, and was just about to make an apology, when she said:

"I told mamma, and she said it was all right," at the same time giving him a kiss which nearly took his breath away. "Papa is going to town this morning, dear, and your ride in with him and talk it over; but he won't object, I know."

"But, my dear miss, I was very foolish, and—"

"No, indeed; you were all right."

"Well, I will go to my post, and return for you, for I must soon at once."

"No; I can go with you."

"You won't have time."

"Oh, yes, I will. Papa will fix that. It would be such an expense for you to come back all the way here."

"But I have no way of taking you."

"I have thought of that. Ma and I don't make any difference. Father will give us a team."

With weary tears in his eyes he went in to breakfast, to which at that moment they were both summoned; but, alas! appetite he had none. It was not that she was not pretty and nice; but he thought what a confounded fool she must be not to see that he wanted to get out of it. But it was now too late. When the Judge started for town, Dr. Graham was sitting beside him. The Judge saved him the trouble of broaching the subject by starting it himself.

"I always, young man, give Nell her own way; so it is all right; you need not say a word."

"But I've got to go to-day."

The old Judge turned his eyes toward him. He had an Arkansas bowie in each, and one of those double-barrel shot-gun looks, as he said, "You ain't a-trying to get out of it, are you?"

The doctor, taking in the situation, said, promptly, all hope being gone, "No, sir."

"That's right. I will fix everything for you; you don't know what a team of mine, and a light wagon to carry your wife's things;" there the doctor shuddered, "and a thousand dollars. You can be married to-night, and leave early in the morning. That'll suit, won't it?"

"Yes, sir," answered Graham, faintly. But on the Judge turning toward him, he said, "Yes, sir, certainly."

"After you get fixed at your post I will come down and pay you a visit. I have been thinking about selling out and moving to Texas for some time; it's getting crowded here, and things are a-moving as slow as 'lasses in winter-time."

Things were arranged as the old Judge said. The marriage took place, and the army received an addition to its ladies in the person of the Arkansas Judge's daughter, and Dr. Graham has never regretted the obduracy of his father-in-law, or the unsophisticatedness of his wife.—Harper's Magazine for January.

Politics.

In the high and difficult art of speaking the truth, silence is the speech whose shadow is to light. So to place one's silence as to increase the amount of truth conveyed is as important a part of sincerity as chiaroscuro is of painting. It is not only that silence is many cases bears so obvious an interpretation that it is just as easy and just as dishonest to deny the truth by silence as by words. The importance of the question is, standing from the salient lies in this, that truth requires not merely that what we say or imply shall not be inconsistent with facts. It requires (in its perfection) that the impressions we convey shall correspond with its subject; that the proportions shall be preserved, and the relations with surrounding objects truly indicated. We see this at once in thinking of the truth of history. A writer who gives undue prominence to one set of facts, or to some favorite personage, distorts and misleads as surely as he would do by definite inaccuracies of statement, and often in a much more important sense. And so in that continual presentation of the affairs of a daily life in which we are all engaged, to alter the proportion of things by a warped reference is a more subtle and more dangerous kind of falsehood than mere verbal inaccuracy. The fact is, that we do not take a sufficiently large view of truth. We do not consider enough how deep and wide a foundation of patient thought, of forbearing justice and discovered and generously must be laid before a perfectly transparent surface can be even possible. Perfect sincerity is the result of a deep inward order, in which the true relation of things are grasped so firmly that our words, our silence, and everything else is which goes to make up our intercourse with each other, fall into their right places without an effort. For silence has its right place as well as speech. There are subjects veiled by natural delicacy, and facts marked off by confidential barriers, which it would be profane to touch at all events he made hot love to her, and finally asked her to be his wife and go to Texas with him, to which she consented. She, being very unsophisticated and innocent, took everything he said in deepest earnest, and loved her it was a case of "love at first sight."

But I am anticipating. During the night our friend the doctor woke up, and remembered what he had said, and it worried him; but he said to himself, after emptying his water pitcher, "Never mind, I'll make it all right in the morning. I must have made a fool of myself. She's lovely, but what must she think of me?" and rolled over and went to sleep again. Morning came, and upon its going down to the parlor he found the young lady alone, for which he blessed his lucky stars, and was just about to make an apology, when she said:

"I told mamma, and she said it was all right," at the same time giving him a kiss which nearly took his breath away. "Papa is going to town this morning, dear, and your ride in with him and talk it over; but he won't object, I know."

"But, my dear miss, I was very foolish, and—"

"No, indeed; you were all right."

"Well, I will go to my post, and return for you, for I must soon at once."

"No; I can go with you."

"You won't have time."

"Oh, yes, I will. Papa will fix that. It would be such an expense for you to come back all the way here."

"But I have no way of taking you."

"I have thought of that. Ma and I don't make any difference. Father will give us a team."

With weary tears in his eyes he went in to breakfast, to which at that moment they were both summoned; but, alas! appetite he had none. It was not that she was not pretty and nice; but he thought what a confounded fool she must be not to see that he wanted to get out of it. But it was now too late. When the Judge started for town, Dr. Graham was sitting beside him. The Judge saved him the trouble of broaching the subject by starting it himself.

"I always, young man, give Nell her own way; so it is all right; you need not say a word."

"But I've got to go to-day."

The old Judge turned his eyes toward him. He had an Arkansas bowie in each, and one of those double-barrel shot-gun looks, as he said, "You ain't a-trying to get out of it, are you?"

The doctor, taking in the situation, said, promptly, all hope being gone, "No, sir."

"That's right. I will fix everything for you; you don't know what a team of mine, and a light wagon to carry your wife's things;" there the doctor shuddered, "and a thousand dollars. You can be married to-night, and leave early in the morning. That'll suit, won't it?"

"Yes, sir," answered Graham, faintly. But on the Judge turning toward him, he said, "Yes, sir, certainly."

"After you get fixed at your post I will come down and pay you a visit. I have been thinking about selling out and moving to Texas for some time; it's getting crowded here, and things

A Gull Story.

A strange incident occurred on board of the lightship off Frying Pan Shoals. During the prevalence of the severe storm of the 12th of September last, after the darkness of night had set in, rendered doubly ghostly and forbidding by the howling tempest that thundered through the rigging, broke with furious violence over the staunch vessel and sent the salt spray in phosphorescent clouds over the very mastheads, one of the seamen was leaning his elbow upon the port rail of the ship, watching the storm as it raged in all its grandeur and sublimity, when a large black bird dashed through the blinding mist and lit upon the railing near where he was standing. He took the bird, which proved to be an ordinary sea-gull, all wet and drabbled by the storm, and warmed and dried it in his bosom, after which he placed it in a little bed improvised for the occasion, and after first feeding it, as if he had been a little child. The next morning, the storm having subsided, our seaman turned the bird loose, and gave it with no expectation of ever seeing it again. Very much to his surprise, however, on the very next night, at about the same hour as it previously took the gull again put in its appearance, alighting upon the rail of the ship as before, and it and its rescuer soon became fast friends. This incident was repeated for as on the occasion of its first call, and from that time up to November 9th, nearly two months, when the latest intelligence was received from the ship the bird had continued its nightly visits and had been regularly fed and consigned to its "little bed," where it would remain until released the next morning. This is no fancy sketch or draft upon the imagination, but is an "ocean true tale" from a source entirely reliable and trustworthy.—Wilmington (Del.) Star.

A Wedding Mystery Solved.

An American recently solved a mystery which had confused and amazed a wedding party in Rome. The bride was the daughter of one of the most noble Marquises of old or modern Rome, and the groom was the scion of another princely house. The wedding contract had been signed, the groom took the hand of his young wife in his own and kissed its fingers. She smiled at this, and allowed her hand to rest where he had placed it. But in a moment, to the dismay of the company, a voice was heard, as from her lips, saying: "Impertinent! how dare you touch my hand? Be off, fool." Still she smiled, and her face, and lower gazed upon her face in dismay. Suddenly she seemed to laugh, and it was a dry and ironical laugh that startled people more than their harsh words had heard before. "Has the girl gone mad?" some one asked. She fainted, and her friends gathered wildly around the sofa on which she had fallen. At this moment a young American, described as "of great learning, but generally very taciturn and almost timid in manner," offered to examine into the cause of the strange occurrence, and approached the sofa. Casting his eyes on and around the sofa, and then about the room, he proceeded to crawl along the floor on his hands and knees until he came to a large ottoman. Behind this he found the bridegroom who had been dismissed from the house that morning, and went away declaring that she would be revenged. By some means she had found her way into the parlor and concealed herself behind the ottoman. Being a ventriloquist, she was able there to speak in a tone of voice which was naturally attributed to the bride.—N. Y. Tribune.

Good Milkers.

The above caption we purpose to use in two senses—first as applied to cows. The breeders of "milking strains of blood" in the various kinds of cattle, when their stock is put on sale, give statistics of milking qualities which, in some instances, are quite startling. It is worth while when at a starting a herd of cattle intending to grow into something excellent for dairy purposes, to look well to the "strain of blood" pedigree and all that, and not be captivated by the milking statistics; but one fact must not be forgotten, and it is this, that all good breeds are originated by extra care as well as selection. The majority of people who buy cows, purchase for their own use one or two. They want good milkers, and let it be said in their favor that it is not all-important that they should search the herd-books or study the laws of breeding in field of selection. Through the country are scattered grade cattle of merit as milkers, every one of them the possible in any connection with the prominent milking families. Once get hold of a cow that under ordinary treatment gives a good quantity of milk, and by a judicious course of the feeding, and by a judicious course of the feeding, and by a judicious course of the feeding

The whole country may just as well thoroughly understand the lumber situation one thing as another. Consumers will have a jollification next year. Building may to day be erected for fully fifty per cent less than four years ago, and still the owners of fine stumpage are not satisfied. It is priestly plain that they will not be satisfied either, so long as there is financial breath left in them.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made by Louis H. Norman, of Wilson, Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Silas Pratt, of the state and county aforesaid, dated October 19th, A. D. 1877, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 20th day of November, A. D. 1877, in Liber "Three" of Mortgages, on page 222, which mortgage was assigned by the said Silas Pratt to William B. Sargent, on the 3d day of November, A. D. 1877, and the assignment thereof recorded in the office of the said Register of Deeds of Charlevoix county on the 13th day of November, A. D. 1877, in Liber "Three" of Mortgages on page 99, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of One Hundred and Twenty-seven Dollars and Fifty-eight cents, and an attorney's fee of Thirty dollars, provided for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given, that on Friday, the 14th day of March, A. D. 1879, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the court house in the village of Charlevoix, that being the place where the circuit court for said county is holden, the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest on said amount at the rate of seven dollars on the hundred dollars, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of thirty dollars, covenanted to be paid by the terms of said mortgage, and all taxes and charges which I may be compelled to pay on said premises after the execution of this notice. The premises being described in said mortgage, as all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section eighteen (18) in township, Thirty-six, (36) North of Range six (6) West, containing forty acres, more or less.

DETROIT
Post & Tribune.

The Metropolitan Republican Journal of Michigan.

The publishers of the Detroit Post and Tribune point to the record of journalistic enterprise and political usefulness made in the first year of the existence of the consolidated newspapers as the satisfactory evidence of the excellence of its claim upon the public confidence and support. The paper will continue to be the sincere, vigorous, and able advocate of the Republican political doctrine, of an honest and rational financial financial policy, and of state development.

Its large resources, its ample facilities in news gathering, its wide circulation, and its position as the metropolitan organ of the dominant party in its state enable it to deliver to its subscribers a newspaper promptly and completely to supplement promptly by performance, and to fully meet the expectations of its patrons.

The news department of the Post and Tribune will be kept fresh, accurate and complete; the paper has control of the largest facilities for getting intelligence, foreign, domestic, state and local, and maintains special correspondents at all important points in Michigan, and at the centers of news elsewhere.

Its compilations of State news and its commercial reports are well known for fulness and reliability.

Its editorial page discusses current issues candidly, and from the standpoints of accurate information, and of an adherence to correct political and economic principles. All matters of special public interest will receive from it the same intelligent and painstaking investigation which it has given this year the important phases of the currency question.

Its columns will be rich in pithy, miscellaneous reading matter, including sketches, poems, and selections from the current literature of the day. Special care will be taken to keep the paper pure and elevated in tone.

One page of the Post and Tribune is devoted to matter prepared for the rural community, containing discussions of questions of interest to practical agriculturists, hints on farm and house topics, recipes, etc.

New features will be added to the paper during 1879, and neither pains nor expense will be spared in keeping the Post and Tribune a

W. S. HAKEN, who lately purchased 200 acres of land in Hayes, six miles from this village, has commenced with energy to improve his property. He has contracted for the chopping of 15 acres, and is getting out logs for lumber with which to erect farm buildings.

MORE SNOW.—Yes, and more thaw. Old Boreas commenced his capers again New Year's day and kept them up for three days. The roads in all directions were blockaded. No mail arrived from the north on Friday, and none from the south Thursday or Saturday. It was the most severe storm of the season thus far.

MASONIC.—The following is the completed list of newly elected Masonic officers:

CENTRAL WARNING.—Much to our regret, a previous engagement prevented us from participating in the crystal wedding of Mr. and Mrs Jackson Ingalls, at Pleasley, on Wednesday evening last. For fifteen years Mrs. Ingalls has made Jack "toe the scratch," and twelve of those years they have lived in Charlevoix. The occasion of the fifteenth anniversaries of their wedding was attended by a number of their Charlevoix friends, and many from Petoskey. The crystal gifts were many. May Jack and his lady live to celebrate their diamond wedding.

A PLEASANT CAPTIVITY.—That good and all sometimes travel in the same vehicle, and eat with the same spoon, we can testify with uplifted hand. The editor and his wife, and Archie Buttars and his sister were on New Year's day the guests of F. J. Beech and lady, of Norwood. New Year's day however, to our party, began from Wednesday morning until Saturday morning. The elements, in conjunction with the snow drifts, held us prisoners, but were ever prisoners so happy situated, or so humanely treated. Our host and hostess, and family consisting of Miss Avery, Miss Meech, the venerable Dr. Chamberlain and his lady, are the best combination of the elements of joyousness that we were ever thrown among. Every mood that settled down over the heads of the prisoners was promptly punctured and dispelled by some one of these friends. We actually caught ourself hoping for a snow storm every time we should visit Norwood. The party returned home Saturday, the earliest possible moment, experiencing great difficulty in reaching Charlevoix even as soon as that.

We shall not take issue with the Board of Supervisors, or any fraction of that body, on any of the matters of contention. But rather we commend their good taste and personal virtues. We sometime ago dubbed one of the county legislators the "orator of the Board." We repent it. His flights of eloquence were sublimely grand. His logic was profound. His gestures Websterian. His arrival in town was always heralded as an auspicious event. As he walked down the street admiring citizens would say, "There goes the orator." At each successive meeting of the Board the speeches of the "orator" were increased in number and intensified in brilliancy. At the session just closed, the "orator" rose to the zenith of his fame. The words which fell from his lips were like shrapnels from the muzzle of a thirty-two pounder. That he was the facile princeps of the Board we are certain at first the devil was once an angel. Milton says Satan made a fool of himself, and so did our friend. All orators must have something to talk about, and so Charlevoix and her various denizens was the lofty mark at which he aimed his pop gun. The SENTINEL, with an unfledged desire to help along an aspiring genius, called him an orator. It was a mistake. We had the wrong mule by the ears. Our readers have heard of the Hindoo of tradition, who, having lost his donkey, went out in the dusk to search for him. Discerning the form of an animal, he seized it and led it captive to his enclosure. The light revealed a lion, which from sheer astonishment had suffered himself to be captured. By reversing the order of beast, our position is illustrated. We went out to capture a lion, and lassoed of the mane we found the ears. We shall be more careful in the future.

IMPORTANT TRANSACTION.—To day, Orvis D. Wood, of Norwood, formally closed a bargain with W. C. Newman, of this place, for fifteen acres of land and five lots on the terrace on the south side of Charlevoix harbor. The price paid was $500. Mr. Wood bought this property with a view of making a home in Charlevoix, and will, at an early day erect a residence overlooking the village, at a cost from $3,000 to $5,000. Mr. Wood has long been looking about for a suitable location upon which to settle down in Charlevoix. He has thoroughly weighed the advantages of other points, and their future prospects, and with the clear prophetic vision for which he is noted, he selected Charlevoix as the most desirable and the most promising point in the region. We have interviewed Mr. Wood, and find that he makes this investment in full confidence in all that is claimed for Charlevoix, its present or future. We are sure Mr. Wood will make a valuable acquisition to our thriving and progressive town. May many more like him follow.

THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS organized Wednesday, but have lengthened their session until Monday waiting for members who were unable to get here owing to the storm.

Very little business was transacted. The salaries of county officers were reduced twenty five per cent.

A resolution was introduced to submit to the people at the next spring election, the matter of the removal of the county seat to the head of Pine Lake, and, not receiving the necessary two-thirds vote was lost. The following was the vote:

Ayes—Wooden, Robinson, Ackerson, Bailey, Hicks, Darrah, Niles—7.

Nays—Green, Smith, Ward, Weaver, Wood, Kost—6.

The official proceedings will appear next week.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

Two residents of Hillsville, Va., recently disputed about a young lady's age—one holding that she was twenty, the other that she was eighteen—and fought about it, one being killed.

—At Murphy, N. C., the other day, Wesley Thompson and Henry Falmer got into a dispute over a game of drawpoker. Thompson charged his antagonist with cheating. He denied it, and Thompson shot and killed him.

Charles Roble died at Franklin, N C., a few days ago, and while his body lay unburied in the house, Charles Bowman, a step-son of the deceased, without the slightest provocation, shot and killed his step-brother in the adjoining room to that in which the body of Roble was laid out.

—A cat that kills rattlesnakes is owned by Charles Baker, a Granger, who is reclaiming desert land on the Gila, opposite Blakeek. The cat watches them until they uncoil and start to glide off; then jumps and catches them by the back of the neck, chewing the vertebræ till the snakes are dead, and with his claws tearing loose any coils that may be thrown around his body. He has already killed several.—Arizona Sentinel.

A curious Connecticut accident: Mrs. Gilbert Graves, of South Killingly, fell down the cellar stairs with a bucket of hot water in her hand, a step giving way, and was badly bruised and scalded. S. W. Franklyn, a neighbor, heard her cries, and, going to her assistance, tumbled through the break and was seriously injured internally. Then, to cap the climax, Mrs. Graves' son, aged eleven, came to the rescue, and was soon lamenting with the others on the cellar bottom.

—Pat Cannon, a Pittsburgh engineer, was at work at his engine in one of the mills in that city a few days ago. A belt in the gearing over his head was loose, and while putting it on a pulley he was caught by the coat-sleeve. The pulley was making 300 revolutions per minute, and in a twinkling his body was wrapped around the shaft. The heavy beam work above the shafting caught the body and mangled it frightfully. The machinery had to be removed to get out the head and trunk. The shoes and one foot were thrown 300 feet from where the accident occurred.

—At Paterson, N. J. the other afternoon, a man and boy attempted to drive a wagon along the Little Falls turnpike, which was submerged by the freshet. They missed the road, and drove into the channel of the river, above Passaic Falls. The wagon-body, with the man and boy, floated off. The swift current bore them toward the rapids and the plunge of seventy feet beyond. Some gentlemen who were on the bridge that spans the river just above the boiling rapids, hastily tore the reins from some horses standing there and made lines, which the man and boy caught as they passed under, and were saved. The wagon-body plunged over the falls.

—A few mornings ago, in Grammar school No. 19, in New York City, containing 1,910 children, a blaze of fire shot up through the heating register in one of the rooms. The teacher, with great presence of mind, closed the register to keep out the blaze, sent hasty word to the Principal, and quieted the children by telling them a story. The bell was instantly struck which called all the pupils into line in each room. A second stroke brought the classes separately marshalled into the main room, and a third stroke started them all into the street, amazed but ignorant, and inclined to be jolly at the prospect of an unexpected holiday. The rooms were cleared without any sign of hurry or confusion within two minutes of the first alarm. The children gave three cheers as they emerged into the area, and did not guess the cause of their sudden dismissal until, upon reaching the street, they saw the 3 engines unlimbering.

A Sioux Wedding.

The Hon. G. F. Blanchard, who recently exchanged the care and worry of calling the Nebraska State Senate to order for the less prominent but more lucrative position of Indian Trader, was sitting in the office of his store, an afternoon or so ago, when Ben Tobbits, the agency butcher, entered, and after a few preliminaries told Mr. Blanchard that a wedding was to take place at his tepee that evening, and that the happy couple would consider it a great favor if, following the ceremony, they might use that room for a reception and dance.

"Certainly," said the rather astonished merchant, "but who are to be married, and who is there out in this country to dance waltzes and such things?"

"Well," responded Ben, "the bride's Weash-wash-tay, or The Pretty Woman, a grand-daughter of Smoke, who was King of the whole Dakota Nation fifteen years or so ago, and the groom's one of the white employes here. As for the dancing that'll be all right."

"But," queried Mr. Blanchard; "are these folks to be married in Indian fashion?"

"Oh, no. Dr. Irvin's going to hitch them in first-class double harness accordin' to the statute in that case made and provided, and by the authority vested in me and all that sort of thing, you know. Oh, you bet it's all solid clear through."

"Very well. You may tell your friend that the office is at his disposal."

At seven that evening the ceremony took place, and Weash-wash-tay, who then for damned white women's clothes, demeaned herself as modestly and appropriately as any of her fairer sisters under like conditions. Her hair was done in a French twist and neatly banded with a crimson ribbon, which contrasted well with her ringlets of glossy black. Her tresaures were purely Indian, but of a type which warranted her name, and her great dark eyes glanced about on the assembled guests with just enough of tremor in them to suggest a measure of maidenly hesitation. Her dress and shawl were not only neat but in good style, and the little feet which peeped out beneath were encased in bootees that might have vied in size with the glass slipper of Cinderella. As for the groom, he was in the ordinary dress an American citizen wears when got up for a special event. After the ceremony, Macipeah Leutah, known to the whites as Red Cloud, Chief of the Ogalallas, who was present as representative of the bride's family and Nation, arose, and with a native grace and solemnity which impressed all present, raised his hands toward the still and starry heavens and prayed the Great Spirit that he would look down upon the Indian girl and her husband in kindness and not in anger; that he would help them to follow the good way in this world, and after life was over bring them to a place of rest and peace in the eternal hereafter. He then enjoined upon the pair the duty of being good to each other, kind to their friends and helpful to the poor.

In the meantime the mirth had begun in the low log room "up town." On an improvised platform against the wall sat the musicians, Curtis, Dr. Irwin's colored cook, with the guitar; a wandering half-whacker with the violin and one of O'Beirne's mechanics with a piccolo. The fun ceased for a moment when the bridal party entered, and then went on with greater zest than ever. Not a white woman was present, the female dancers being half or full-blood Ogalallas. Yet the pulsing rhythm of music never met with better response from flying feet, and the daughters of the prairie endowed the poetry of motion with an accuracy and zest often foreign to it.

As the music rose and fell to the good old strains of the Virginia reel, Dr. Irwin turned to the Times Commissioner and said:

"Do you know I regard this scene as a flattering comment on my administration. Three years back and you couldn't have found one of these women in white costume, and, as for figures or music, they knew none outside those of the scalp-dance and that of the tonsorial artist. Now you see them as self-possessed as though they were paler ones, and had known the ways of civilization all their lives long."

At this moment there came a lull the couples on the floor took seats, and the musicians turning to Mr. Jordan, the chief clerk, remarked:

"I wish, Charley, as those fellers play so well, you'd see if they can't give us a march between dances."

The request was conveyed to the motley orchestra, and after a whispered consultation they began. As the weird, beautiful, perfect harmony filled every nook of this far-off spot the General stared, and then turning to the writer whispered:

"In the name of enchantment, don't you recognize that music?"

"Yes. It's the grand march from 'Norma,' isn't it?"

"Of course; but who would ever have dreamed of hearing it here?"

The air reached and charmed the ears of the Indians clustered about like siren strains, and they drew stealthily nearer to catch every note, until with a finale that was wonderful in its melody, the strains ceased, and wandered off through the night to woo the distant pines.—Ogallalla (I. T.) Cor. Chicago Times.

Elephant Herds.

Herds of elephants usually consist of from thirty to fifty individuals, but much larger numbers, even one hundred, are by no means uncommon. When large herds are in localities where fodder is not very plentiful, they divide into parties of from ten to twenty; these remain separate, though within two or three miles of each other. But they all take part in any common movement, such as a march in another tract of forest. The different parties keep themselves informed at all times of each other's whereabouts, chiefly by their fine sense of smell. I have observed that tame elephants can scent wild ones at a distance of three miles when the wind is favorable. Each herd of elephants is a family in which the animals are nearly allied to each other. Though the different herds do not intermix, escaped tame female elephants, or young males, appear to find no difficulty in obtaining admittance to herds.

In a herd of elephants the females with their calves form the advanced guard, while the tuskers follow leisurely behind, as the unencumbered tuskers have no one to see to but themselves. I have never known a case of a tusker undertaking to cover the retreat of a herd. A herd is invariably led by a female—never a male—and the females with young ones are at all times dangerous if intruded upon. The necessity for the convenience of the mothers of the herd regulating its movement is evident, as they must accommodate the length and time of their marches, and the localities in which they rest or feed at different hours, to the requirements of their young ones; consequently the guidance of a tusker would not suit them.

Elephants make use of a great variety of sounds in communicating with each other, and in expressing their wants and feelings. Some are uttered by the trunk, some by the throat. The conjunctures in which either means of expression is employed cannot be strictly classified—as fear, pleasure, want and other emotions are sometimes indicated by the trunk, sometimes by the throat. An elephant rushing upon an assailant trumpets shrilly with fury; but if enraged by wounds or other causes, and brooding by itself, it expresses its anger by a continued hoarse grumbling from the throat. Fear is similarly expressed by a shrill, brassy trumpet, or by a roar from the lungs; pleasure by a continued low squeaking through the trunk, or an almost inaudible purring sound from the throat. Want—as a calf calling its mother—is chiefly expressed by the throat. A peculiar sound is made use of by elephants to express dislike or apprehension, and at the same time to intimidate, as when the cause of alarm has not been clearly ascertained, and the animals wish to deter an intruder. It is produced by rapping the end of the trunk smartly on the ground, a current of air, hitherto retained, being sharply emitted through the trunk, as from a valve, at the moment of impact. The sound made resembles that of a large sheet of tin rapidly doubled.

While in open country the herds move about a good deal during the day in cloudy, showery weather. On very hot days and indeed any days they keep to bamboo cover, which is cool and warm. During breaks, when the sun shines for a few hours, they come out to feed. They are fond of standing on the sheet-rock so common in the Mysore country above hill ranges. The young calves and staid mothers, in small groups, half dozing as they bask, form tranquil family pictures at such times. Elephants are partial to rocky places at all seasons.

While marching from one track of forest to another, elephants travel in strict Indian file. They seldom stay more than one or two days at the same halting-place, as the fodder becomes exhausted. They rest during the middle hours of the night, as well as during the day. Sometimes down, and then usually dispose themselves in small distinct squads of animals which seem to have an affection for each other. (Tame elephants frequently display a particular liking for one or other of their fellows.) About three o'clock they rise to feed or march, and ten o'clock in the day they are again collected, and rest till afternoon; at eleven at night they again rest. In showery and cool weather elephants are frequently on the move all day long.

When a calf is born, the herd remains with its mother two days; the calf is then capable of marching. Even at this early age calves are no encumbrance to the herd's movement; the youngest climb and cross rivers, assisted by the trunk, and keep up with the herd. They seem also to live in good peace of mind, when things are done according to the will and opinion; but if things happen otherwise than they desire, they are straightway moved and much vexed.

An old custom is hardly broken, and no man is willing to be led farther than himself can see.

If thou dost more rely upon thine own reason or industry, than upon that power which brings thee under the obedience of Jesus Christ, it will be long before thou become illuminated; for God will have us perfectly subject unto Him, that, being inflamed with His love, we may transcend the narrow limits of human reason.—Thomas a' Kempis.

Conscience Void of Offense.

"Herein do I exercise myself, to have always conscience void of offense toward God and toward men."—Acts xxiv.16.

WHAT is conscience? The indicator of our doings; the tablet on which are writ all our deeds, good and bad. We had a good conscience spoken of seven or eight times in the New Testament in this portion of the Acts Paul speaks of "a conscience void of offense toward God, and toward men." In no use if we can understand what the apostle meant.

The conscience that God has given us is the guide of our lives when it is "void of offense." Paul meant that he always acted so that his conscience approved of it. He was "void of offense"—that which is offensive, or might cause another to stumble. He kept his conscience so pure and enlightened in regard to duty, that he acted in accordance to its dictates, and his conduct was not displeasing to God nor injurious to men.

"Toward God"—he endeavored to discharge all the duties of public and private worship, and constantly what God required, believing all He has said, and doing all that He approves.

"Toward men"—

Let me say and show you what I mean by acting so that the conscience approves.

There was a lad in Ireland who worked at a linen manufactory, and one day a piece of cloth was wanted to be sent out which was found to be shorter than it ought to be. The master thought it might be made the proper length by a little stretching. He unrolled the cloth, and, taking one end himself, told the boy to take the other. "Pull, Adam, pull," said the master. The master pulled with all his might, but the boy stood still. "Pull, Adam, pull," said his master again. "I can't," said the boy. "Why not?" said the master. "Because it's wrong," said the boy, and he refused to pull. His master discharged him. That boy became Dr. Adam Clarke. His conscience approved of what he did. It was the purity of his conscience that enabled him so to act.

Could we, in as simple a thing as that, also be did?

Paul says, "Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men." But how can we do this? What does it matter to our fellow-creatures whether we have a conscience void of offense or not? Having the conscience is endeavoring to meet all the demands of justice and love; to promote their happiness, knowledge and salvation so that we may live holy and useful lives with the reflection that we have done our duty; so that we may have nothing to reproach ourselves for, nothing of this kind to make a death-bed miserable.

Now how had Paul come to speak with such certainty about this matter? "Herein, do I," etc. He had found, through constant study and practice, that in order to trusting in God, so act as not to have an accusing conscience. —Cor. Rural New Yorker.

What "Bosh" Means.

In a lecture on Jerusalem at the Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church, in Attorney street, last evening, the Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman, ex-pastor to ex-President Grant, traced the history of that city from that date of the earliest Biblical record until the present time, and told how its appearance when he visited it a few years ago compared with what he might have expected from his Scriptural reading. He said that many of the old customs and usages still remained and some of the old customs are still in vogue. One evening, while strolling about, he met a strange-looking procession, headed by a band of unschooled musicians. At the end of the line a group of men were carrying on their shoulders a rude bower. In which a maiden of thirteen, deeply veiled, reclined. "What is this?" he asked of his guide. "It is but of a marriage procession," was the response, "and if you come here at midnight you will see the bridegroom." And sure enough—"let us, midnight, the bridegroom cometh"—he came, a youth of fourteen. The bride was waiting for him, still veiled, at his father's house. He had never seen her face, the marriage having been arranged by a mutual friend. He raised the veil and exclaimed, "Yes, thank God," and his friends went home rejoicing. Had he meant "no" he would have said "Bosh!" and his friends would have gone home sad. The future of Jerusalem thrilled Dr. Newman to think of, for he had no doubt the Jews would become united there as the grandest commonwealth that the world ever saw. Already a Jew—Rothschild—owned the Holy Land.—N. Y. World.

MORE LIGHT.

THE crisp leaves, wrested by the rain,
Are loosened, and fall
Where the farmer they seem fall fain
To drop off from the tree;
Then in the wind a soft arms they tie,
As if they were well pleased to die.

And as I gaze up through the trees
That shot my college in,
Whose foliage thins, with each light breeze,
Its ivy more may thin,
From light, from any element not mine,
Falls like a blessing on my brow.

And in the forest, o'er the field,
Gray heralds are, many gone,
And winding sweet paths are revealed
As Winds were before unseen,
With opened sieves and carved glades,
Once leaf by summer's lively maids.

These comfort me with promise sweet,
That, as in life, performance so
At fall youth's new hopes attend,
And nothing years autumnal bring
The storm-denied grain the leaf-washed space,
Will only to more light give place.

Light to discern—what lay hid veiled
In the green growth of summer days;
That gladdened for a while, then paled
And fell, as needful to the maze
Made of the first, eternal book
That shall open with the ruddiest shock.

More of the ways, unseen before,
By which God leads us on
To walk with Him, and assume o'er
Earth's pleasures dead and gone;
And see, with heart-illumined eyes,
The glades and hills of Paradise.

Iron-Shod.

THE safety of a mountain climber depends upon being well shod. Therefore the Swiss guides wear heavy shoes with sharp spikes in the soles.

On a bright July morning a famous scientist of England started with two gentlemen to ascend the Piz Morteratsch, a high and lofty snow mountain in Switzerland.

Though experienced mountaineers, they took with them a lad, the boldest guide in that district. After reaching the summit of the Morteratsch, they started back, and soon arrived at a steep slope covered with thin snow. They were lashed together with a strong rope, which was tied to each man's waist.

"Keep carefully in my steps, gentlemen," said Jenni, "for a false step here might start the snow and send us down an avalanche."

He had scarcely spoken when the whole field of mélèze began to slide down the icy-mountain side, carrying the adventurers with it at a terrible pace. A steeper slope was before them, and at the end of it a precipice! The three foremost men were almost buried in the whirling snow. Below them were the jaws of death. Everything depended upon getting a foothold.

Jenni shouted loudly, "Halt, halt!" and with desperate energy drove his iron-nailed boots into the firn ice beneath the moving snow.

Within a few rods of the precipice, Jenni got a hold with his feet, and was able to bring the party up all standing, when two seconds more would have swept them into the chasm.

This half-romantic story shows the value of being well shod in dangerous places, especially the young. No boy is prepared for rough climbing, unless he is well shod with Christian principles. Sometimes temptation lies the track under him, and then he must plant his foot down with an iron heel, or he is gone.

A poor boy of my acquaintance signed a pledge never to taste liquor. One day his rich employer invited him to dinner. There was wine on the table, but the lad was not ashamed to say:

"No, I thank you, sir. I never touch it!"

Then came on a rich pudding, which the boy tasted, and found that there was brandy in it; so he quietly laid the tasted morsel back on his plate. The employer discovered that the boy had "pluck" enough to stand by his convictions, and he will never be afraid to trust him. He is a sure-footed boy. God loves what steep places he before us. He has provided the "shoes of iron and brass" for us to put on. They are truth, sincerity, and faith, and courage, and prayer.

A clear conscience will keep the head cool. And by along the lines of duty there is a sign-board on which is written in large, bright letters, "He that walketh uprightly, walketh surely."—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler.

Of Avoiding Rash Judgment.

TURN thine eyes unto thyself, and beware thou judge not the deeds of other men. In judging of others a man laboreth in vain, often erreth and easily sinneth; but in judging and examining himself, he always laboreth faithfully.

We often judge of things according as we fancy them; for private affection bereaves us easily of a right judgment.

If God were always the pure object of our desire, we should not be so easily troubled, through the repugnance of our carnal mind.

But oftentimes something lurketh within, or else encometh from without, which draweth us after it.

Many secretly seek themselves in what they do, and know it not.

They seem also to live in good peace of mind, when things are done according to the will and opinion; but if things happen otherwise than they desire, they are straightway moved and much vexed.

An old custom is hardly broken, and no man is willing to be led farther than himself can see.

If thou dost more rely upon thine own reason or industry, than upon that power which brings thee under the obedience of Jesus Christ, it will be long before thou become illuminated; for God will have us perfectly subject unto Him, that, being inflamed with His love, we may transcend the narrow limits of human reason.—Thomas a' Kempis.

Conscience Void of Offense.

"Herein do I exercise myself, to have always conscience void of offense toward God and toward men."—Acts xxiv.16.

WHAT is conscience? The indicator of our doings; the tablet on which are writ all our deeds, good and bad. We had a good conscience spoken of seven or eight times in the New Testament in this portion of the Acts Paul speaks of "a conscience void of offense toward God, and toward men." In no use if we can understand what the apostle meant.

The conscience that God has given us is the guide of our lives when it is "void of offense." Paul meant that he always acted so that his conscience approved of it. He was "void of offense"—that which is offensive, or might cause another to stumble. He kept his conscience so pure and enlightened in regard to duty, that he acted in accordance to its dictates, and his conduct was not displeasing to God nor injurious to men.

"Toward God"—he endeavored to discharge all the duties of public and private worship, and constantly what God required, believing all He has said, and doing all that He approves.

Let me say and show you what I mean by acting so that the conscience approves.

There was a lad in Ireland who worked at a linen manufactory, and one day a piece of cloth was wanted to be sent out which was found to be shorter than it ought to be. The master thought it might be made the proper length by a little stretching. He unrolled the cloth, and, taking one end himself, told the boy to take the other. "Pull, Adam, pull," said the master. The master pulled with all his might, but the boy stood still. "Pull, Adam, pull," said his master again. "I can't," said the boy. "Why not?" said the master. "Because it's wrong," said the boy, and he refused to pull. His master discharged him. That boy became Dr. Adam Clarke. His conscience approved of what he did. It was the purity of his conscience that enabled him so to act.

Could we, in as simple a thing as that, also be did?

Paul says, "Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men." But how can we do this? What does it matter to our fellow-creatures whether we have a conscience void of offense or not? Having the conscience is endeavoring to meet all the demands of justice and love; to promote their happiness, knowledge and salvation so that we may live holy and useful lives with the reflection that we have done our duty; so that we may have nothing to reproach ourselves for, nothing of this kind to make a death-bed miserable.

Now how had Paul come to speak with such certainty about this matter? "Herein, do I," etc. He had found, through constant study and practice, that in order to trusting in God, so act as not to have an accusing conscience. —Cor. Rural New Yorker.

What "Bosh" Means.

In a lecture on Jerusalem at the Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church, in Attorney street, last evening, the Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman, ex-pastor to ex-President Grant, traced the history of that city from that date of the earliest Biblical record until the present time, and told how its appearance when he visited it a few years ago compared with what he might have expected from his Scriptural reading. He said that many of the old customs and usages still remained and some of the old customs are still in vogue. One evening, while strolling about, he met a strange-looking procession, headed by a band of unschooled musicians. At the end of the line a group of men were carrying on their shoulders a rude bower. In which a maiden of thirteen, deeply veiled, reclined. "What is this?" he asked of his guide. "It is but of a marriage procession," was the response, "and if you come here at midnight you will see the bridegroom." And sure enough—"let us, midnight, the bridegroom cometh"—he came, a youth of fourteen. The bride was waiting for him, still veiled, at his father's house. He had never seen her face, the marriage having been arranged by a mutual friend. He raised the veil and exclaimed, "Yes, thank God," and his friends went home rejoicing. Had he meant "no" he would have said "Bosh!" and his friends would have gone home sad. The future of Jerusalem thrilled Dr. Newman to think of, for he had no doubt the Jews would become united there as the grandest commonwealth that the world ever saw. Already a Jew—Rothschild—owned the Holy Land.—N. Y. World.

It must have been after a Thanksgiving dinner that Macbeth exclaimed, "Hons, horrible shadow, Hens!" —Boston Com. Bulletin.

Judicial Decision of Bets.

A Colorado Court, in the case of Eldred against Malley, decided that a promise to pay a sum of money, upon the condition that a railroad should be built to a place named on or before a specified day, is void as a wager. The Courtsays: "The courts of this Territory have enough to do without devoting their time to the solution of questions arising out of idle bets made on dog and cock fights, horse races, the speed of ox trains, the construction of railroads, the number on a dice or the character of a card that may be turned up. If we enter upon the work of settling bets made by gamblers in one case, especially on the issue when the Colorado Central Railroad reaches Golden, or when it will reach Georgetown, we may well despair of ever finding time for the despatch of those weightier matters which affect the personal and property rights of the respectable people in this Territory. If the gate is once opened for this kind of litigation, it is more than probable that we may be overrun with questions arising out of bets. The spirit of our laws discountenances gambling. Penalties are prescribed against gaming, and I can see no difference in principle in the bet that the faro dealer will turn up a jack the next turn and the bet that the railroad will be built to Table Mountain in so many days."

"FATHER," said an inquisitive boy, "what is meant by close relations?" "Close relations, my son," replied the father, "are relations that never give you a cent." The boy said the old man, then, was the "closest" relation he'd got.

RHEUMATISM is frequently the result of an overdose of sedatives, in other words, to be caught out in a pouring rain often insures a roaring pain.—Yonkers Gazette.

Schoolroom Headaches.

MANY people who have public school teachers among their acquaintance are firmly of the opinion that the schoolroom has a headache system all its own, and their impression would be strengthened if they were to interview boys and girls. There is nothing strange about the complaint; the only wonder is that it is not continuous and that anybody escapes it. With systems of heating and ventilation that are almost uniformly defective, and, worse yet, under the control of janitors who have no knowledge whatever of these departments of their business, and who are as apt as any other men to neglect or despise whatever they do not understand, many of our schoolrooms are boxes almost hermetically sealed, into which hot air is being driven and compressed. The heat is frequently intolerable, the expired breath and other physical emanations of the children pollute the air to a degree extremely dangerous to health, as teachers and children, who, at nine o'clock entered the room in full health and spirits, emerge at noon with listless step, aching head and deranged vital organs. Should a teacher's nature protest against breathing a poisoned and sweltering in it, up goes a window, and straightway all the children in its immediate vicinity are ordered to be temporarily relieved from one danger only to submit to another. The condition of the air of schoolrooms is no secret to Boards of Education; it has been the subject of some statistics, by experts, which forcibly suggest the Black Hole of Calcutta. Pupils, that is to say, one half a bushel of moist feed or roots, at once is sufficient. It is well to feed four times a day. The practice of a well-conducted milk dairy is to feed at six o'clock in the morning one bushel of cut fodder, wet and mixed with three quarts of feed of corn, oats and bran. At eight o'clock the cows are turned out to water and have a picking at the stubble or some cut corn fodder. At eleven o'clock they are brought into the stable for an hour, and are each served with half a bushel of cheap roots, beets or mangels, with two quarts of feed mixed with them. At twelve o'clock they are turned out to water again before being running water in the yard—and pick at the straw or fodder racks until 4:30 o'clock, when they are brought in to be milked, and after that are fed with a similar mess to that of the morning. The last thing in the evening is to give them a few pounds of loose hay and to feel them comfortably with straw and shut them up in a stable thoroughly dry, well ventilated, cleanly and free from draughts. This regimen is not the most economical, but it is nevertheless, broad, high, spacious and well-aired. It is difficult to say how this method can be mended, and if regularity is observed in the same manner, and a good kind of cows are kept, the maximum yield of milk, both in quantity and quality, may be expected.—N. Y. Times.

Winter Rules.

Never lean with the back upon anything that is cold.

Never begin a journey until the breakfast has been eaten.

Never take warm drinks and then immediately go out in the cold air.

Keep the back—especially between the shoulder-blades—well covered, also the chest well protected.

In sleeping in a cold room, establish the habit of breathing through the nose, and never with the mouth open.

Never go to bed with cold or damp feet; always toast them by a fire ten or fifteen minutes before going to bed.

Never omit regular bathing, for unless the skin is in an active condition, the cold will drive the germs and favor congestion or other disease.

After exercise of any kind, never ride in an open carriage nor near the window of one, for a moment. It is dangerous to health, and even to life.

When hoarse, speak as little as possible until it is recovered from, else the voice may be permanently lost, or difficulties of the throat be produced.

Merely warm the body by a fire, and never continue keeping it so after exposed to heat after it has become comfortably warm. To do otherwise is debilitating.

When going from a warm atmosphere into a colder one, keep the mouth closed, that the air may be warmed by its passage through the nose, ere it reaches the lungs.

Never stand still in cold weather, especially after having taken a slight degree of exercise; and always avoid standing upon ice or snow, or where the person is exposed to a cold wind.—Albany (N. Y.) Argus.

"AH, by George!" groaned young Mr. Lethered, shaking wearily into an office-chair, "ah, by George! my head aches fearfully." "Dyspepsia?" asked his employer, old Mr. Haraldax, with a look of curious interest and sympathy. "Possible? Something must have got into it." And then for a long time nobody said anything, and the room seemed to grow about fifteen degrees colder.—Hawk-Eye.

"THE LITTLE NEWSBOY" is the title of a new song and refrain, issued in aid of the newsboys of Chicago, words by Mrs. V. J. Kent, and music by J. Marsh Towne. It has a most attractive and characteristic title-page, which, with the genuine merit of the words and music, ought to bring a large return in aid of the little "Arabs." To the charitably-disposed, it will doubly repay the investment. Price, 35 cents, postpaid. Address, Newsboys' Home, 145 and 149 Quincy St., Chicago.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Every farm should own a good farmer.

—Oranges and lemons keep best when wrapped close in soft paper and laid in a drawer.

—Recollect that unskilled treatment of dumb animals is as likely to kill as to cure.—State Register.

—It is said feeding cows with turnips immediately after milking will prevent any offensive flavor to the milk.—Exchange.

—To keep cheese that has been cut, tie it in a cloth and put it in a cool place; if mold appears, wipe it off with a cloth.

—Boiled onions are prescribed in England for a cold in the chest, and onions, either cooked or raw, for chronic rheumatism.

—Celery Salt.—Save the root of the celery plant, dry and grate it, mixing it with sun-third as much salt. Keep in a bottle well corked, and it is delicious for soups, oysters, gravies, or hashes.

—Intelligent farming is learning to adapt methods to conditions and circumstances. There are fixed principles that apply to each condition. The means of being reasonably wealthy, Dr. Pierce has erected an elegant sanitarium, at a cost nearly half a million dollars. No institution in the world offers advantages superior to those found in this establishment. Half a score of physicians are in attendance, several of whom have been prominently connected with leading American and European Hospitals. THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, JAN. 7, - - - 1879.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Dec. 27, 1878

EDITOR SENTINEL:

This is holiday week: not only the calendar, but by a thousand other and equally convincing tokens. The world is involved in a different atmosphere, for these few closing days of the year, from that which ordinarily encompasses it; and a wonderful atmosphere it is. It may be cold, or wet, or bright, or dark, but it is still quivering with the pulsations of the wings of that "multitude of the heavenly host," and with the echoes of their first and matchless Christmas song. Frosty as it is, what strange and penetrating vitality is in it! It throws great, glorious Christmas trees into more than summer bloom. Its jovial blasts force open the doors of churches, homes, and hearts. It may freeze water, but thaws the blood. More wonderful than all, it can work itself down into the most tightly buttoned pockets, and heat the coin so hot that it burns its way out. It is the very reverse of the ill wind that blows nobody good; for it bears on Santa Claus—that jolly old almoner—in his aerial flights, drops fuel and food on to the hovel's door step, costly trinkets down the mansion's chimney, and good cheer all along the route. It is so full of moral oxygen that it sets people a bowing, smiling, shaking hands, and slapping each other on the back, like so much laughing gas. It—it well, I wish you and your readers a merry Christmas and a happy New-Year.

Gold has given it up at last, and comes down to earth again. For half a generation it has been a proud mineral, disdaining to associate with anybody outside a small coterie of bankers, or to do any harder work than lying in state in safes and vaults. It has, so to speak, been ballooning so long that it hated to give up the aristocratic recreation and come down to biz. But the balloon sprung a small leak even before the war ended, and, in spite of all effort, has been slowly sinking ever since. It touched ground some days ago, and thought it has bounded feebly several times since, after the manner of balloons it is now being made fast, and the sybarite gold, reluctant to leave his long vacation, is rolling up his sleeves preparatory to going to work

And speaking of resumption reminds me to relieve you and your readers from anxiety you must have felt as to how you should be able to carry around your wealth when metallic money is again current. The Government has just finished the plates of the new $5,000 and $10,000 notes, which will be at once put with the otherwise necessary wheelbarrow, and be able to carry all the pocket-money we need in a little roll of these bills, hardly bigger than your fist?

Another preparation for resumption has just been discovered in this city by the police, who traced a young man named Tyce to a tenement-house in Thirteenth Street, and forcing their way into his room, found him busily employed in quietly and unostentatiously "making money." He had plaster molds and a kettle of melted white metal, and was grinding out quarters, dimes, and half dimes at the rate of about $20 per day. It seemed cruel to interrupt these vigorous preparations for resumption, but the officers took him, and Mr. Tyce will turn his talents to averting the State for some years to come.

"There is a reaper whose name is Death," according to the old poem, and for a sickle he uses a great variety of instrumentalities. Of all these weapons, disease is his favorite; but when this fails to accomplish his purpose, the felt destroyer has recourse to fire arms, paving stones, boiler explosions, and even tinkers' wagons. It was this latter agency which enabled him of the skull and cross bones to gain to victory, an old colored woman who for four years more than a century had defied his every effort. Mrs. Thompson was born on Long Island two years before the Declaration of Independence. New York and even Massachusetts were slaveholding States at that time, so that she was born a slave and remained such until a knight errant appeared to burst her bonds in the person of a young negro who, having fallen in love with her, labored patiently till he had saved money enough to purchase her freedom and his own, when he married her.

For more than half a century Mrs Thompson lived in this city, a humble, but worthy member of the community, and at the time of the accident which resulted in her death, was possessed of a degree of health and strength that entitled her to at least a dozen years more of active life. Curiously enough, on the day of this centenarian's funeral, the death was reported of another one, a woman just one hundred years old.

Paul Boyton, the adventurous swimmer, whose exploits are known to the world, arrived here the other night, after an absence of three years in Europe. During that time comparatively little has been heard from Captain Boyton, but he has been by no means idle. He has made many exciting and perilous voyages, among them being trips down the Danube, the Po, the Arno, the Tiber, the Rhone, the Loire, the Tagus, the Garonne, and the Seine. The voyage down the Tagus extended over eight hundred miles, through a wild and practically unexplored country. Besides these feats, he has crossed the Straits of Messina, the Straits of Gibraltar and other comparatively wide arms of the sea. As might be expected, he has in these voyages met some exciting and thrilling adventures. The narrative of these and of the receptions given to the fearless swimmer by various crowned heads, forms a highly interesting narrative.

The pedestrian mania is our sporting disease just now. O'Leary and Campana are taking in an unprecedentedly large amount of gate money at the Hippodrome where they are completing a six days' march; and a "Mushmo" Anderson is doing a proportionately drawing business over in Brooklyn, where she is attempting to do some unreasonable number of quarter-miles in an equally absurd number of quarter-hours. The newspaper offices gravely hang out bulletins at various times during the day to satisfy an impatient public as to the condition of these human kittens who, with equal gravity, continue the long and profitable chase of their own tails.

With the holidays come the orange, and as this season has been an exceptional one, it is estimated that in the month ending with New Years' 50,000,000 oranges will be sold in this city. Already the fruit departments of Fulton and Washington markets are glutted, and by one steamer due in port today 800,000 oranges, by another 3,000 barrels, or 1,000,000 oranges, and by another 350,000 in bulk are expected. The barrel stock, nearly all of which comes from the West Indies, and the case and box stock, mainly from Mediterranean ports, are consigned to shipping and commission houses, by whom they will be distributed among the trade. The stock in bulk, however, partly from the West Indies and partly Florida, is sold in quantities from one barrel to 1,000 barrels at the docks.

The importation of this fruit is a terrible precarious business. To say that the fruit is perishable, as the term is usually understood, is an inadequate expression of the extent of that risk, there is no product so perishable. Of about two hundred million oranges received here last season—from September until March—nearly eighty-three millions perished.

RADIX.

To the Four Winds.

Five weeping children were left orphans the other day by the death of their mother, a widow who lived on Prospect street, says the Detroit Free Press. The father was killed at one of the depots about two years ago, and since then the mother has kept the family together by hard day's work. Lack of food, exposure and worry brought on an illness which terminated fatally, and the children huddled together in a corner of a room feeling awed and frightened, but yet unable to realize that death had made them waifs. When her remains had been sent away to the Potter's field a dozen women gathered and held a whispered conversation:

I'll take one of the poor things, though I've four children of my own," said one of the women.

"And I'll take another."

"And so will I."

Then there was the baby—a toddling boy, who had been rocked to sleep every night of his life, and whose big blue eyes were full of tears as he shrank behind his sister to escape observation. As none of the poor women seemed prepared to take so young a child, a girl not over 10 years old, dressed a little better than other children there, crept into the group, reached out for the babe, patted his white head, kissed him, and said:

"I will take this one! I have no brother, and ma and pa will let me keep him. He can sleep in my trundle-bed, play with my doll, and they may put all the Christmas presents into his stocking!" and the girl ran around the corner and returned with her mother, who sanctioned all she had said. "Come, bubby —you're mine now!" called the girl, and he laughed as she put her arms around him and tried to lift him up.

By and by a woman said: "Children, you have neither father, mother nor home. You must be divided up or go to the Poor House. Kiss each other, poor orphans, and all kiss the baby!"

They put their arms around him, and hugged and kissed him, and they went out from the old house to go in different directions and perhaps never again to meet all together.

Personal and Political.

People who think Kentucky is some on the lull don't read the Texas papers. We absolutely get ashamed of ourselves when we read the bloody specials to the Galveston News.—Louisville Courier Journal

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Cheuter, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

THE Indian Bureau, at Washington, received a telegram, on the 20th, from Yakima, W. T., to the effect that the Indian Chief Moses and ten of his principal men had been captured, and that the latter's friends were getting on to the reservation as fast as possible. Not a gun had been fired. This news was regarded with great satisfaction by the Bureau as indicating that the recent imminent danger of an Indian war in Washington Territory had been averted by the action of the agents of the Interior Department and other civil authorities.

AT Janesville, Wis., on the 26th, Mrs. Mallinda Mack was convicted of the murder of her husband, a farmer, residing near that city, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. A hired man, named Dickerson, indicted with her, as an accomplice in the crime, was acquitted that she did the killing, and that he assisted her to carry the body of the victim into the stable, where it was placed, set found, at the heels of a horse, to give the appearance of having been kicked and trampled to death. Dickerson's trial is still fahter.

ON the 27th, Wall street (N. Y.) banks were paying out to their depositors whatever gold was wanted by them, at par.

MAJ. ALFRED CLARK and Jos. St. Pierle, on trial, in Chicago, for the murder of Mr. Clark, at Lagrange, a few months ago, were, on the 27th, declared by the jury to be "not guilty."

BY an explosion which occurred in the glycerine works at Upper Preakness, five miles from Paterson, N. J., on the 29th ult., three men were torn into fragments and blown in every direction. The building and an adjoining house were completely demolished, and houses in Paterson were shaken as if by an earthquake.

A RECENT report places the total amount contributed in Cincinnati for the relief of sufferers in the South during the late yellow-fever epidemic at $68,726.26, exclusive of the hundreds of contributions of the Catholic Church.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

ON Christmas night, ex-Congressman Owen Jones, of Pennsylvania, went to visit a neighbor. He was found lying by the roadside and froze to death three or four hours later.

REV. LEONARD WOODS, A distinguished New England theologian and author, and formerly President of Bowdoin College, in Maine, died on the 20th.

THE President is said to have recently stated that he was giving no attention to the collection of offices-records showing intimidation and fraud in the recent elections in the Southern States, for the use of the Teller Committee, but that he assured that the committee formally refused to call upon him for such information.

A WASHINGTON telegram of the 17th says Mr. Tilden will be one of the first witnesses called before the Potter Committee, when the House instructs it to investigate the cipher telegrams.

GEN. SHERMAN received a dispatch from Gen. Sheridan, on the 20th ult., stating that he had mailed his ready to Secretary Schurz with regard to the speculations called for by that officer, in support of the charges of mismanagement of Indian affairs in the West.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN dispatches of the 24th say the report of Bismarck's illness was being urged with renewed vigor. In official circles some astonishment was expressed that no denial was pressed.

THE Empress of Germany has sent an autograph letter of condolence to the widow of the late Bayard Taylor.

AN Austro-Italian treaty of commerce has been signed.

A COPENHAGEN (Denmark) hotel-keeper has been arrested for sending letters to the King threatening his assassination.

THE result of the inquiry into the circumstances attending the loss of the steamer Pomerania, is a decision that the Captain and officers did all that was possible to be done to avoid the collision and the loss of life.

THE Great Council of Geneva has accepted the principle of the separation of Church and State, and appointed a committee to project that principle in a law.

ACCORDING to a Kuram (India) telegram, received in London on the 26th, an Afghan soldier in the British service had been hanged for firing his gun in a way his countrymen of the advance on Peiwar Pass. Eighteen others had been sentenced to terms of penal servitude, ranging from seven to fourteen years, for desertion.

THE steamer State of Louisiana, from Glasgow for New York, ran on a rock in Lorne Lough, on the Scottish Coast, on the 30th. It was thought she could not be got off. No lives were lost.

SULEIMAN PASHA, the Turkish General who was sentenced to confinement in a Turkish stronghold for alleged misconduct during the war with Russia, has been pardoned by the Sultan.

YAKOOB KHAN, the hopeful son of Shere Ali, who was left in supreme command of the Afghan forces when the Ameer fled his Kingdom, had, according to a London telegram of the 27th, gone to the British quarters at Jelalabad and made his submission.

A TIFLIS dispatch received in Vienna, on the 27th, states that the Ameer of Afghanistan had arrived at Tashkend.

ABDIN PALACE, the winter residence of the Khedive of Egypt, at Cairo, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 26th.

On the 8th of December, the steamer Emily B. Souder left New York for Puerto Plata, and when two days out foundered with all on board. She carried nine passengers and twenty-nine officers and seamen. Of these only two were known to have been saved up to the morning of the 27th.

A PORT DE PAIX (Hayti) telegram, received in New York on the 27th, says the river there had changed its course and cut a pathway through the town, destroying many houses and drowning a great many of the inhabitants. The town of St. Louis del Nord had also been entirely destroyed.

ACCORDING to a Vienna telegram to the London Times of the 29th ult., the Tartar inhabitants of the Russian district of Kuran had revolted. The troops first sent against the insurgents were repulsed with heavy loss.

THE plague has disappeared at Morocco.

THE Marquis of Tweeddale died at Lee Ion, on the 29th ult.

Fashionable Furs.

The choice of furs becomes, from winter to winter, a more difficult matter. Almost every kind of fur is now imitated, seal-skin even not excepted. Furriers now dye many real furs, to make them blacker and more glossy; so it is by no means easy to distinguish the real article from the imitation. The length of the hair is a very good indication of the quality of the fur, the long-haired fur being the best. In Paris, the most fashionable furs this year are black and dark shades. Among the ordinary kinds of black fur are the "sibelinette" and "Siberienne," and after these come beaver and skunk. For ordinary dresses and traveling suits. Gilder, silver and blue fox are as much in favor as ever. These furs are only suitable for velvet and satin garments. They are also much used for lining evening garments and opera-cloaks. White hare, swan and ermine, which are not much used for lining purposes, are reserved exclusively for children's suits and garments. Chinchilla, though not fashionable, is always worn. "Grebe" is a kind of feather trimming, although it is classed among furs. It is principally used for young girls' suits. This fur, in its natural color, has a silvery shade, and is dyed to great advantage for boa-nets. Seal-skin, like ermine, is as much, if not more, worn than ever. It is considered the most stylish of all furs, and is worn by gentlemen as well as ladies. Coats, vests, caps and trimmings are made of this fur. Ladies' seal-skin garments are very long. Young ladies wear half light-fitting seal-skin paletots, with the Persian cap to match. Confections trimmed with bands of seal-skin are very handsome, especially when the material is satin or "gros de Suez" in the same shade as the fur.

A new suit for a royal wedding, just made in this combination, is as follows: The body is of seal-colored satin. The front of the skirt is rather short, showing the shoe. It is bordered, rather than trimmed, with ruching, which falls over the foot. Under the ruching is a close kilt plaiting, and under this is the balayeuse. Above the ruching are three rows of inserted ivory of sealcolored faille puffings. The seal vest has a long basque buttoning to the end, which reaches to the puffings on the skirt. The colored enamelled buttons are square. The satin habit has seal-skin revers, cut very open, over the breast. It is not buttoned, but is fastened down at the waist by a metal "chainette." The revers on the skirt are fastened below the hips under a rosette. Satin plaits are on either side of the revers. The combination of seal-skin and satin forms in the back a long habit-basque.

A novelty in the fur line is Russian cat's skin. The hair is very long and glossy, shading off brown and fawn colors. It is very soft to the touch, and is only distinct in that it is very expensive.—N. Y. Times.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

THOMAS KENNAN, a Flint laborer, was found in a shed in the outskirts of that city, the other day, nearly frozen to death and very weak from the loss of blood. A horrible gash on the left temple had severed the temporal artery, a violent blow on the side of his head opening the skull, with bruises about the muscles, and his clothing was saturated with blood. He was brought to Flint, and his wounds dressed. He had been drinking the night before with two ruffians, who enticed him into the shed where he was found, when he was knocked down and robbed of a quantity of money and left for dead.

SIX buildings were destroyed by fire at Ludington, on the morning of the 20th. Loss about $10,000.

PRESIDENT HAYES has pardoned from the Jackson State Prison Edward D. Curtis, a resident of Grand Haven, who was sentenced one year ago to two years in the State Prison for robbing the mail, while employed as assistant mail agent on the Detroit & Milwaukee Railroad.

THE foreman of a Grand Rapids Fire Engine Company has resigned to enter the Michigan University.

THE new State House at Lansing came near burning, on the morning of the 20th. About two o'clock in the morning a watchman detected a very strong smell of smoke in the vicinity of the Representatives' Hall. After much search, a window fastened by the doors being locked and an key to be had, he gained an entrance to the hall and found the wainscoting and carpet on the west side on fire. The flames were promptly extinguished, much damage being done to the wainscoting, carpet, door and electric apparatus. The fire is supposed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion.

THE balance of cash in the State Treasury Dec. 14 was $224,004.67. Receipts for the week ending Dec. 21 were $17,133.02; payments for same time, $10,353.79; leaving a balance Dec. 21, 1878, of $231,004.90; increase for the week, $6792.23.

THE following are the estimates presented by the United States Chief of Engineers of the amounts that can profitably be expended on Michigan harbors during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880: St. Mary's Falls Ship Canal, $365,000; Port Huron Harbor, $20,000; Detroit River, $100,000; Ontonagon Harbor, $20,000; Eagle Harbor, $10,000; Marquette Harbor, $78,850; Manistee Harbor, $30,000; Frankfort Harbor, $25,000; White River Harbor, $24,291; Muskegon Harbor, $8,886; Grand Haven Harbor, $20,146; Black Lake Harbor, $22,000; Saugatuck Harbor, $10,000; Charlevoix Harbor, $20,000; Frankfort Harbor, $19,340; South Haven Harbor, $20,000; St. Joseph Harbor, $19,216. Total, $1,055,426.

THE funeral of the late Gen. Williams took place at Detroit with imposing ceremonies, on the afternoon of the 24th, the United States troops, local military organizations and members of the city government attending. The streets were filled with spectators, and despite the intense cold, a great concourse of people followed the body to Elmwood Cemetery on the conclusion of the impressive services at St. Paul's Church.

JAMES O'GRADY, ex-Judge of the Lake Superior District Court of Michigan, died at his late residence in Houghton, on the 24th.

MANY lumbermen express fears that the winter's operations in the pineries will again lead to a glut in the lumber market.

PRESQUE ISLE county, on the Saginaw River, think that a man was mired and lost in the swamp near that place a few days ago.

THE dedication of the mammoth Advent Tabernacle, at Battle Creek, is adjourned till next May, on account of the absence of Elder James White.

A CURIOUS obstacle to theft of one of Houghton's bankrupt merchants, who has just succeeded in settling up his affairs. At the final meeting up of the matter it was found that the estate lacked just $7.70 of paying a certain percentage to its creditors. The bankrupt merchant proudly walked up with a well-filled pocket-book to the Commissioner, and said he would pay the amount out of his own pockets, and he did.

IN an altercation at the Village of Freelands, in Saginaw County, the other night, between Charles Jordon and Bradley Irving, the latter bit Jordon's ear off close to his head. A duel was in progress at the time.

AT Detroit, on the 25th, Israel Weicenth received a judgment of $2,500 against Richard Weiss. Plaintiff's son was fighting with defendant's son, when the latter interfered, kicking his son's opponent and rupturing him, as plaintiff claimed.

THE latest reports from Detroit give the following as the current prices for leading staples: Barley, State, per cental, $1.00@1.75; Butter, W. R., 26@34c; Cheese, W. R., 9@ 11c; Corn, W. R., 31@40c; Flour, White Winter, $4.00@5.50; Amber, $4.25@4.75; Rye, $3.00@3.50; Cattle, W. cental, $2.00@4.75; Hogs, $2.00@3.50; Sheep, $2.00@3.10; Oats, Mixed, W. bu., 24@ 25c; White, 26@30c; Pork, Mess, W. bu., $7.00@9.00; Rye, W. bu., 46@50c; Wheat, White, 89@90c; No. Amber, 87@94c.

Schliemann's Further Excavations at Troy.

Dr. Schliemann, after an interruption of five years and a half, resumed, Sept. 30 last, his search for the buried Troy. He is obliged to give the Imperial Museum at Constantinople two-thirds of the discoveries, and to keep all the expenses, now amounting to $2,500 a month. A delegate of the Turkish Government is on the spot, and a guard of ten gendarmes is furnished. At Hissarlik, where all the excavations have been made, Dr. S. traces the remains of no fewer than four pre-historic cities which had been built on the same site, and the second of these is, he maintains, the Homeric Troy. He expects, before the season of operation closes, to bring to light the whole western and northern part of the circuit wall, the construction of which Homer ascribes to Poseidon and Apollo (Iliad vii-453), as well as all that remains of the pre-historic city immediately adjacent to the northwest and west of the great gate, which he attributes to the ancient town's King, because it is the largest and best built house in the city. In it were found hundreds of remarkable objects, and one of the watchmen he detected a very strong smell of smoke in the vicinity of the Representatives' Hall. After much search, a window fastened by the doors being locked and an key to be had, he gained an entrance to the hall and found the wainscoting and carpet on the west side on fire. A Railroad-Car Incident.

An amusing incident happened on a New York & New Haven train, the other day. When the train arrived at the depot in Hartford a gentleman and woman got up and started for the rear end of the car. He had gone but a few steps before the lady who had been sitting with him rose with one hand full of knitting work and followed him down the aisle, her hands extended. It was noticed by the passengers that the ball of yarn was in his pocket. When he got up he turned around several times before starting, and in so doing had wound the yarn around him so that the old lady had no choice except to follow him, drop her knitting, or see her yarn broken. She said not a word, but a passenger, noticing what was going on, reached up and gently taking the unconscious old gentleman by the arm, turned him around so he saw what he was doing, and the yarn was saved. By this time the rest of the passengers were roaring with laughter. —Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard.

A Fatherly Man.

Griswold street, from Fort to Congress, offers much superior facilities for falling down in the winter that all nowsboys and bootblacks who look upon the bright and cheerful side of life loaf around that section a great deal in order to be on hand when the climax occurs. Seven of them stood in a row yesterday morning at a fatherly, unwieldy citizen turned the corner of the Moffatt Block.

"Select your spot!" they yelled, as he reached the descent, and in about a minute he reached the conclusion that they had gathered there to see him fall. Some man would have jumped aside into the street, but this fatherly man continued on. He resolved to himself:

"Now, these boys are poor, forlorn boys. They seldom have any fun. They are hungry, ragged, and do not look forward to Christmas. They wish me to fall. If, by falling, I can add to their happiness, it is my duty to do so."

Those boys may never know that that good man fell on purpose to please them. He suddenly made a slip to the left, stretching out his leg, until it looked to be ten feet long—then a slip to the right, and as he recovered he struck his heels toward the South Pole, clawed out like a million eagle wings fastened together, and the snow where he struck flew seventeen feet. He didn't get up and tell the boys that it was a pitiful job to lighten their burdens of care and sorrow for a moment, but he knows and the reader knows that it was.—Detroit Free Press.

A Silver Plant.

A few days ago, the express brought to this city a large quantity of silver coin, supposed to be $20,000. It was consigned to the Fourth National Bank, Chestnut and Walnut streets. There would have been nothing strange about this incident if it had not been known that the coin was of an extraordinary kind, and was unexpectedly exhibited in the South Kensington Museum. The walls of this mansion are at a depth of about twenty-eight feet below the surface of the hill, and precisely like the cyclopean walls of the Royal Palace at Mycenæ, and the cyclopean walls of Tiryns. They can only have served as sub-structures to a stately and very elevated wooden building, for otherwise there is no way of explaining the huge masses of red, black and yellow wood ashes, intermixed with charcoal, by which they are covered to a depth of nine feet. Among these ashes the doctor has recently found a red hand-made vase, containing, among other things, twenty gold earrings, four gold hair-pins, a large number of gold beads, bracelet of electrum, fragments of necklaces.

Most remarkable among the new discoveries is a well-preserved disinfi ed wooden seven feet long, with the ancient charred black as coal. At this depth of twenty-eight feet, curious objects of various kinds are constantly being unearthed. Three gates before the prehistoric mansion have been laid open, varying in breadth respectively from ten to seventeen and one-half feet. Unfortunately, the approach of winter, which is severe in that region, will suspend further excavations until next spring. The zealous antiquarian is sure that, eventually, he will be able to prove to the most skeptical that he has struck the site of the City of Priam, and to more fully identify the ruins with the localities described by Homer.

The pre-historic times are of vague signification. Although the date of the Trojan War can be fixed with some approximation of accuracy, there is a long period of time deeper in the womb of ages, beyond the reach of chronology. It is only of late years that we have begun to form some idea of the immense lapse of time from the creation to the present day. The ancient Egyptian priest carried human annals back into regions that were no account of. The Egyptian priests reckoned the time from the reign of Helius to Alexander at about 23,000 years. Cicero speaks of the memorials of the Babylonians as embracing a period of 470,000 years. Herodotus in addition to those of his friends which may be in attendance.

These are only medium funerals, and if we should put the figures at the high notch, it would not be less than $1,000 more, or about $1,500 for the stylish; and about $600 to fade away in an ordinarily respectable quiet manner. This is in painful contrast with the burial of the friendless poor, who have a grave in Potter's Field—a plain wood box and a horse and wagon to convey them to the shore of the Dark River.—Cincinnati Times.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

DO WE WELL TO MOURN.

Tho, grieved it can be no offense to Him
Who made us sensitive our loss to know;
The hand that takes the cup filled to the brim
May well with trembling make it overflow.

Who sends us sorrow means it should be felt;
Who gave us tears would surely have them shed.
And "metal" that the "furnace" doth not melt,
May yet be hardened all the more instead.

Where love abounded will the grief abound!
To check our grief is but to chide our love;
With withered leaves the more bestrewed the ground,
The fuller fruit the rose hath bloomed above!

Yet, grieved 'tis Nature's that is, God's—indeed,
If what is nature called is will divine—
Who feels would grieve not cannot know how bleed
It is to sorrow, and yet not repine.

THE OLD STONE BASIN.

In the heart of the busy city,
In the scorching noon-tide heat,
A basin of solid stone
Falls on the din of the street.

It falls in a gray stone basin,
And over the cool wet brink
The beads of thirsty horses
Each in turn are stretched to drink.

And peering between the crowding heads
As the horses come and go,
The Gift of Three Graces" appears"
Is read on the stone below.

As beasts are not taught letters,
They know no alphabet,
And never a horse in all these years
Has read the words and set

I think that each toil-worn creature
Who stops to drink by the way,
He thanks, in his own dumb fashion,
To the sisters small must pay.

Years have gone by since busy hands
Wrought at the basin a stone;
The kindly little sisters
Are all to worms grown;

I do not know their home or fame
Or the name they bore in song,
But the sweetness of their gracious deed
Is just as fresh as then.

And all life long, and after life,
They must the happier be,
For the "Cup of Water" given by them
Is the "Cup of Water" by me.

OUR NEW NEIGHBORS AT PONKAPOG.

Whoo I saw the little house building, an eighth of a mile beyond my own, on the old Bay Road, I wondered who were to be the tenants. The modest structure was set well back from the road, among the trees, as if the inmates were to care nothing whatever for a view of the stylish equipages which sweep by during the summer season. For my part, I like to see the passing, in town or country; but each has his own taste. The proprietor, who seemed to be very busy about the door of the new house, superintended the various details of the work with an assiduity that gave me a high opinion of his intelligence and executive ability, and I congratulated myself on the prospect of having some very agreeable neighbors.

It was early in the spring, you will remember, when they moved into the cottage—a newly-married couple evidently—for they were young, pretty, and with the air of a baby the husband somewhat older, but still in the first flush of manhood. It was understood in the village that they came from Baltimore; but no one knew them personally, and they brought no letters of introduction. For obvious reasons I refrain from mentioning names.) It was clear that, for the present at least, their own company was entirely sufficient for them. They made no advances to seek the acquaintance of any of the families in the neighborhood, and consequently were left to themselves. That, apparently, was what they desired, and why they came to Ponkapog. For after its black Ian and white (black, and teal), solitude is the chief staple of Ponkapog. Perhaps its perfect rural loveliness should be included. Lying high up under the wing of the Blue Hills, and in the odorous breath of pines and cedars, it chances to be the most enchanting bit of genuine country within fifty miles of Boston, which, moreover, can be reached in half an hour's ride by railway. The Ponkapog railway station (Heaven be praised), is two miles distant, and the seclusion is without a flaw.

Ponkapog has one mail a day; two mails a day would render the place uninhabitable.

The village—it looks like a compact village at a distance, but unravels and disappears the moment you drive into it—has quite a large floating population. I do not allude to the perch and pickerel. Along the Old Bay Road, a highway even in the Colonial days, there are a number of attractive cottages arranging off toward Milton, which are occupied for the summer by people from the city. These birds of passage are a distinct class from the permanent inhabitants; and the two seldom closely assimilate unless there has been some previous connection. It seemed to me that our new neighbors were to come under the head of permanent inhabitants; they had built their own house, and had the air of intending to live in it all the year round.

"Are you not going to call on them?" I asked my wife, one morning.

"When they call on us," she replied, lightly.

"But it is our place to call first, they being strangers."

This was said as seriously as the circumstance demanded; but my wife turned it off with a laugh, and I said no more, always trusting to her intuitions in those matters.

She was right. She would not have been received, and a cool "not a home" would have been a bitter social pill to us if we had gone out of our way to be courteous.

I saw a great deal of our neighbors, nevertheless. Their cottage lay between us and the Postoffice—where he was never to be met with by any chance—and I caught frequent glimpses of the two working in the garden. Horticulture did not appear so much an object as exercise. Possibly he was neither; maybe they were engaged in digging for specimens of those arrowheads and flint hatchets which are continually coming to the surface hereabouts. There is scarcely an acre in which the plowshare has not turned up some primitive stone weapon or domestic utensil, disdainfully left to us by the red men who once held this domain—an ancient tribe called the Punkypoags, a forlorn descendant of which, one Billy Crowd, figures in the annual Blue Book, down to the close of the Southern war, as a State pensioner. I quote from the local historiographer.

Whether they were developing a kitchen-garden, or emulating Prof. Schliemannat Mycenæ, the newcomers were evidently persons of refined musical taste; the lady had a voice of remarkable sweetness, although of no great compass, and I used often to linger of my walk to hear her sing over and listen to her executing an operatic air, contrecurally at some window upstairs, for she was never visible from the public road. The husband, somewhere about the grounds, would occasionally respond with two or three bars. It was quite an ideal Arcadian business. They seemed very happy together, these two persons, who had the odds whatever of the community in which they had settled themselves.

There was a queerness, a sort of mystery, about the couple which I admit, piqued my curiosity, though, as a rule, I have no morbid interest in the affairs of my neighbors. They behaved like a pair of lovers who had run off and got married clandestinely. I willingly accepted this as the one and the other, of having no legal right to do so; for, to change a word in the lines of the poet,

"It is a boy to think the best
We may of human kind."

Admitting the hypothesis of elopement, there was no mystery in their neither sending nor receiving letters. But where did they get their groceries? I do not mean the money to pay for them—that is an enigma apart—but the groceries themselves. No express wagon, no butcher's cart, no vehicle of any description was ever observed to stop at their domicile. Yet they did not order family stores at the sole establishment in the village—an inexhaustible little bottle of a shop which sells (if size is gratis) can turn out anything in the way of groceries, from a handsaw to a pocket-handkerchief. I always allowed this unimportant detail of their housekeeping to occupy more of my speculation than was creditable to me.

In general respects our neighbors reminded me of those inexplicable persons we sometimes come across in great cities, following out some secret and urban places, where the field may be supposed too restricted for their operations. Their business have no perceptible means of subsistence, and manage to live royally on nothing a year. They hold no Government bonds, they possess no real estate (for otherwise they would be in attendance.

These are only medium funerals, and if we should put the figures at the high notch, it would not be less than $1,000 more, or about $1,500 for the stylish; and about $600 to fade away in an ordinarily respectable quiet manner. THE Argentine Republic has an army! It is composed of seventy generals, forty two colonels, seven hundred minor officers and two thousand men, of whom at least one thousand can report at any time as fit for duty. With a few more generals and colonels, a field marshal or two, a commander-in-chief, and a brass band, the Argentine hosts would be a terror to the surrounding nations. Let us be thankful that Argentine is a long way off; and that none of our neat door neighbors are armed to the teeth in this way.

THE Petoskey Record gives an account of the wanderings in the woods of Mr. C. A. Burnham, of Bear Lake, Emmet county, who started on the 10th inst., from his home to go to claybord, Otsego county. He took the train at Petoskey on the morning of the 11th, leaving the train at Almira, from whence a wagon-road runs east to Gaylord. He arrived at Gaylord in safety, and started out to look up the land. He soon became confused and lost. He was without provisions of any kind and lost for his gun and supply of ammunition must have soon starved to death. As it was he was able to secure enough game for food, but his sufferings from exposure and cold were terrible. For eight long, weary days and nights he struggled on. The Record closes a somewhat lengthy account of his wanderings as follows:

At night scraping together a few leaves, and covering himself under the lee of a fallen tree, he stretched his limbs for repose, only to resume his weary tramp in the morning. One eventful night he spent in clinging to the ice of changing branches of a tree which he was obliged to climb to escape a pack of wolves, following on his trail, whose horrid jaws, with their gleaming rows of teeth, perpetually met the vision through the slowly revolving hours of terrible agony, as they prowled about. At last, on the eighth day, with feet frozen, having been entirely without protection for them during the last day, he dragged his weary limbs into Alpena, a distance of about sixty miles from where he commenced his terrible march. He started almost impromptu during the hours of daylight, and frequently kept on his track. After a short rest, he started from Alpena for home, arriving at Petoskey Monday night. On Tuesday morning, worn, he hired him Dan Lakeward, where he expressed himself as entirely willing to stay, having no desire to repeat his thrilling experience of the past two weeks.

Will Myers and a few other roughs disturbed a prayer meeting at Sous Lodge Lake, seven miles south of Cedar, Saturday, Dec. 27th. After services they were asked for an explanation of their conduct by Jack Ward and Charley Crand. After some words a fight followed, in which long hunting knives were used. Crane was cut in the bowels, and Ward received flesh cuts in the shoulder and one in the lungs. Both are in a critical condition. It was a soul inspiring prayer meeting, full of grace, peace, good will to men, and muscular Christianity.

Newman, of Wilson, Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Dexter Post, of the State and county aforesaid, bearing date July 8, A. D. 1875, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 10th day of November, A. D. 1875, in Liber "Four" of Mortgages, on page 222, which mortgage was assigned by the said Dexter Post to William B. Sargent, on the 30 day of November, A. D. 1877, and the said mortgage and the debt thereby secured, with the said Register of Deeds of Charlevoix county on the 10th day of November, A. D. 1875, in Liber "Four" of Mortgages, on page 222, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due and unpaid the sum of One Hundred and Thirty-six Dollars and Fifty-Eight cents, and an attorney's fee of thirty dollars, provided for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, there is hereby given notice that on Friday, the 14th day of March, A. D. 1879, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Court House in the village of Charlevoix, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county holds) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest thereon at seven per cent, interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of thirty dollars aforesaid, as provided for therein, the premises described in said mortgage, as all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section eighteen in township thirty-one (31) North, of Range Six (6) West, containing forty acres, more or less.

DETROIT
Post & Tribune.
The Metropolitan Republican Journal of Michigan.
The publishers of the Detroit Post and Tribune point to the record of journalistic enterprise and political achievement made in the first year of the existence of the consolidated newspaper as the satisfactory result of the combined efforts of the staffs which made the parent journals so conspicuous and successful. The paper will continue to be the sincere, vigorous, and able advocate of the Republican political principles, as the honest and rational financial policy, and of plain, safe expenses.
Its large resources, its ample facilities in newsgathering, its wide circulation and its position as the metropolitan organ of the Republican party in its state enable the publishers to supplement promises by performance, and to fully meet the expectations of its patrons.
The new department of the Post and Tribune will be kept fresh, diverse and complete; the paper has control of the largest facilities of getting intelligence by telegraph, correspondents and special, and no reliance will be spared to make it an important guide to Republicans, and to the main centers of news and views.
Its compilations of State news and its commercial reports are well known for fullness and reliability.
Its editorial page discusses current issues sanely, and from the standpoints of maximum results, and of all addressed to the practical political and economic public spirit. All matters of special public interest will receive from it the same intelligent and prompt taking investigation which it has given during the important phases of the currency question.
Its columns will be rich in miscellaneous reading matter, containing sketches, poems, and several serials now secured therefor of the day. Especial care will be taken to keep the paper pure and elevated in tone.
The page of the Post and Tribune is devoted to matter prepared for the rural community, consisting of discussions of questions of farm practice, practical agriculture, letters on farm and home topics, recipes, etc.
Departments will be added to the Post and Tribune, and neither pains nor expense will be spared in keeping the Post and Tribune a
First-Class Family Paper.
Strong in all its departments, and in every way worthy of the great name with which it is now and has long been closely identified.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made by James A. Emerson to Gerrit Rethune, dated April 20th, A. D. 1876, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, on the 15th day of May, A. D. 1876, in Liber four of Mortgages, on page 287, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Five Hundred and Fifty-two Dollars and Seventy cents, and no attorney's fee of fifty dollars provided for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 24th day of March, A. D. 1879, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, I shall sell at Public Auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the court house, in the village of Charlevoix, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix county is holden), the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon at seven per cent. interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of thirty dollars provided for in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, the said premises described in said mortgage, as follows, to-wit: All those certain pieces or parcels of land situate in the village of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, and known and described as follows: Lot Five (5) of Block Eight (8) of the village of Charlevoix, according to the recorded plat of the said village of Charlevoix.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss. At a session of the Probate Court for said county, held at the Probate Office in the Village of St. James, on the 27th day of November, A. D., 1878. Present, C. B. Wright, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Michael Gallagher, deceased.
On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Ellen Pope Gallagher, praying for the appointment of an administrator of said estate.
Thereupon it is ordered that Tuesday, the 25th day of March, 1879, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate Office in the village of St. James, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted. And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper circulated in said county for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

They are mounted upon a shield of ash, with the names of the donor and recipient affixed in cut black walnut letters. Q. S. Smith, of this place, did the mounting, and it speaks well for his skill.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

More Favorable News Regarding Appropriations.

The reports that no harbor and river bill would be likely to pass this winter seem to have had no foundation. Mr. Congressman Dunnel, of the Committee on Commerce, does not credit the reports that there will be no river and harbor appropriation bill this year. He says there is a feeling among some southern members that the Secretary of War has not expended the money appropriated for the public works in the South as freely as in the North, but this will not be used to prevent the passage of the regular bill. The committee will, he thinks, report one next week. Mr. Reagan, the chairman of the committee, is in favor of having the bill as usual.

A circumstance that seems most favorable for Charlevoix, and, in fact, all harbors in the 9th District, is that Congressman Hubbell is one of a sub committee of three which were on Wednesday last ordered to prepare a bill.

Marine Matters at Grand Haven.

A Grand Haven gentleman writing on New Year's Day says:

The steamer Amazon, Minneapolis and Peron City are bringing full cargoes of eastward bound freight to Grand Haven as often as the weather permits. The D. G. H. & M. R. R. find it different to furnish cars for so large an amount of freight, but there has been no blockades as yet. The steamers have been delayed but little by ice. The Amazon was stopped a few hours by slush ice here on Christmas. She stranded for Milwaukee Monday night, but a westerly wind had jammed the ice against this shore and prevented her from getting out. The Minneapolis arrived outside form Milwaukee on Tuesday, and being likewise unable to break through the ice which had accumulated, was unable to enter the harbor, and lay just outside the pier. She was still lying there Wednesday morning. However, the wind is now blowing from the southeast, and if it continues, will drift the ice into the lake and free the steamer.

OUR BOARD.

"Tax-Payer" Believes his Mind Regarding of the Last Session of the Board of Supervisors.

MR. EDITOR—

The first day of January, 1879, will be a day long to be remembered by the citizens of Michigan. It was on that day that the Legislature met at the new capitol building at Lansing, and the Board of Supervisors of Charlevoix county met at Charlevoix.

Now Mr. Editor, don't tell me that I am mistaken, and that the Supervisors met on the second, at one o'clock P. M., as per adjournment, for I can produce written evidence that they met on the first.

Our first witness is Mr. Supervisor Wooden who presents a bill to the Board for one half day on the first, and one day on the second, when he did not get to the meeting until after adjournment on the second. He also draws his twenty five miles traveling fees.

Our next is J. E. Derrah, who charges for one half day on the first, and a day on the second, and mileage. His name does not appear on the records of that day.

Next, Geo. W. Bailey gets half a day on the second. His name is not found on the record of that day.

J. H. Ackerson, one day on the first, all day on the second; not present to answer to his name on the record.

W. C. Niles, is quite modest in presenting his bill for two dollars per day, for Dec 31, 1878, and Jan. 1, '79, for committee work, and for a full day's attendance on the 2d.

Kent, Smith, Ward, Weaver and Hicks all made out a full day on the second.

So you see there must be some mistake about the Board, at their Nov. session, adjourning to meet Jan. 2d, at one o'clock. If that were so, there could be no full attendance on that day as there seems to have been. Certainly no member of that Board would charge for a day's attendance when they were not present a full day, and no honorable body like our Board of Supervisors would allow it if they did.

Messrs. Robinson and Wood were not so fortunate as some of their fellows in their division of favors, but they did very well. Robinson charged for a half day on the fifth, one day on the sixth, and mileage, while Wood came in for a full day and mileage, while he was present but half a day.

Now, Mr. Editor, all this proves one of two things: Either that the Board met on the first, or that a majority of that Board are guilty of misdemeanor. (See Sec. 30, Page 241, Compiled Laws of 1871.)

What did that honorable body do during their four day's session? They approved certain county officers bonds, which could have been done by the Judge of Probate. Yes, they reduced the county officers salaries twenty five per cent. Grand saving; but it was more than swallowed up by the expense of the two useless extra sessions.

And they did other valuable services, such as the adoption of the report of the Committee on Public Buildings in that report it was recommended that there be an inside door for the jail, "of flat iron, one inch and a half by half inch, with a hole in it one one foot square, the hole to be made of half inch iron" Amendment by Mr. Niles, that it "be hung with leather hinges." Ayes and nays called.

Ayes—Ackerson, Bailey, Darrah, Hicks, Kent, Niles.

Nays—Green, Smith, Ward, Weaver, Wooden.

That they got ashamed of this and voted to have it stricken from the record does not disprove the fact that they were spending their time in foolishness, and charging the tax payers three dollars per day for it.

They voted to collect a certain note against J. Ingalls forgetting that a majority of themselves were taking more compensation then the law allowed them.

Yours truly,
TAX PAYER.

REPAIRS on the hull and machinery of the steamer Nellie Booth are rapidly transforming her into a new boat.

The Swedish Polar Expedition.

Two weeks ago we called attention to the promises of success awaiting Prof. Nordenskjold's Polar Expedition, which was to demonstrate that there was a northern navigable route from Norway to Japan, or, in other words, a northern passage from the Atlantic to the Pacific. A later dispatch, based on information furnished by whalers coming from the Arctic Ocean into the Pacific, reports the advance vessel in the lead at the culminating point of the voyage, and an expedition is to be started from Japan waters to the relief of the ice-bound vessel. After all there is promise of success, to be measured, or however serious the subject may be in every aspect, present nevertheless some amusing traits. For example; When in the bill of items you see "tears, fifteen francs," "weepers, ten francs," and "regrets, twenty-five francs," you are inclined to laugh. When you see a sliding scale of grief represented by social classes and pomp and show, empty carriages and mournful sham, you are forced to a smile. When you get those big sheets of letter paper, lettre de luxe part, with solemn black borders and the polite sentence of invitation done in splendid flourishes of lively lithographic letters; and when you see a long list of names of family relatives and friends, also beautifully flourished, you are amazed with this document being so hysterically verbose, humorous and jokishly inclined, for frequently some of the possessors of those names are thousands of miles away and perfectly ignorant of the death of the mourned ones. I could fill a couple of columns of the Sun with details of "Les Pompes Funebre," a wholesale and ready-made burying and burial-furnishing establishment at La Villette, that has a monopoly of doing "the dead business." It does "a roaring trade," and divides handsome annual profits to the shareholders, in sums of millions of francs. It is an excellent institution, centralizing system and promptness to a marvelous degree, and employing thousands of professional "mourners"—tearful personages ready-made or to order. The building alone at La Villette is larger than any public edifice in Baltimore, and has every appliance, from nearly one thousand saddened black horses to millions of immortelles, that may be required for every grade of funeral. The men are trained by periodical lessons in the various expressions of "the depths of grief" suitable for funerals of high and low degree, and though they are proverbial jokers among themselves, a smile or cheerful expression of face while on duty would involve immediate dismissal. The master of ceremonies, or ordonnateur, is a dramatic personage, dressed like the Speaker of the British House of Commons, or a superb flunkey in black, with a massive steel chain and round cane, in addition to his black silk stockings, patent leather shoes and bright steel buckles, cutaway coat and general court costume. He moves about with more ease and grace—and more importance than the famous Prince of pew-openers in New York—Brown. He figures largely in the bill, as does everything—for the dearer being the most expensive item of all. The only commendable feature of these ceremonies is celerity, and the sooner such are got rid of the better.—Paris Cor. Baltimore Sun.

A WRITER in the London Times roughly estimates the capital of England in 1872, as follows: Invested in foreign loans, £4000,000,000; invested in British railroads, £400,000,000; invested in the public funds, £800,000,000; invested in British industries, manufactures, mines, ships, etc., £2,000,000,000; land, £3,000,000,000—giving a total of £6,600,000,000; and the income of the working classes was estimated at £400,000,000. During the last five years the "shrinkage" has been considerable; in some cases the loss is actual, and will never be repaid; in others the shrinkage may diminish or it may increase. In the land it is only partial, but a fall in rents from 15 to 20 per cent. is to all reasonable appearances an absolute certainty. How, then, does the capital account stand in 1873? Loss (actual) on foreign loans, Peruvian, Honduras, Turkish, Egyptian, etc., £200,000,000; shrinkage in value of railway stock, 5 per cent., £20,000,000; shrinkage in value of British industries, from 25 to 50 per cent. from £500,000,000 to £700,000,000; in land from 15 to 20 per cent. from £400,000,000 to £600,000,000—total loss or shrinkage in five years from £1,100,000,000 to £1,500,000,000. And in the meantime the earnings of the working classes have fallen off 20 per cents., or £100,000,000 annually. These figures are alarming.

—A mother, in Newark, N. J., left her infant child with its aunt for a few hours. The child went to sleep in the cradle. The aunt tied a cord to the door-knob and threw it over the child's neck, so that it could play with the string when it waked up. The child did play with it, and lifted itself out of the cradle, where it was found dead, having been strangled by the cord.

THE making of horse-hair rings and chains by the convicts in the Kentucky Penitentiary has been prohibited, because of the manner in which they levied assessments on the tails of horses driven into the yard, sometimes seriously disfiguring the animals.

IN furnishing a house the most intractive furniture should be placed in the hall.

Strousberg.

A cable dispatch stated the other day that the famous Dr. Strousberg had offered his creditors three cents on the dollar, and that it was likely to be accepted. Many of our readers will not have forgotten the career of this most extraordinary man. Born in 1823, a Prussian Jew, he went to London in 1855, and in his boyhood joined the Church of England. While a mere youth he dabbled in London journalism, and at twenty-five came to the United States, where he gave lessons in German. It might have been supposed that this country would have proved especially adapted to his peculiar genius; but it was far less so than fifteen years later, and Strousberg, having realized funds by buying some damaged goods and selling them at a heavy profit, returned to London, where he invested his money in a newspaper, and then went to Berlin as agent for an insurance company. A chance acquaintance with some English capitalists led him to becoming a contractor. He went from one work to another, and within a few years was employing over one hundred thousand men, had purchased nearly an entire county in Poland, had an immense mansion in London, and another (now the British Embassy) in Berlin, not surpassed by any in the capital. His munificence was on a corresponding scale. When the famine broke out in East Prussia, he sent whole trains full of provisions to his suffering fellow-countrymen, and during one winter employed ten thousand additional hands, to be served out daily in Berlin. There is no saying how matters might have prospered with him but for the breaking out of the Franco-German War, which found him up to his ears in contracts at once imperilled by that event. Had he declared a failure then he would have merely been deemed a victim of fate, and might have soon made a prosperous fresh start; but he disdained, in the hope of completing his Bohemian iron-works, from which it is said he made his profits, "guilty promises" to the personages ready-made or to order. The building alone at La Villette is larger than any public edifice in Baltimore, and has every appliance, from nearly one thousand saddened black horses to millions of immortelles, that may be required for every grade of funeral. The men are trained by periodical lessons in the various expressions of "the depths of grief" suitable for funerals of high and low degree, and though they are proverbial jokers among themselves, a smile or cheerful expression of face while on duty would involve immediate dismissal. The Birth of a Lake.

John Muir writes, in Scribner for January, of "The Mountain Lakes of California." We quote:

The Merced River, as a whole, is remarkably like an elm-tree, and it requires but little effort on the part of the imagination to picture it standing upright, with all its lakes heaping upon its spreading branches, the topmost eighty miles in height. Now add all the other lake-bearing rivers of the Sierra, each in its place, and you will have a truly glorious spectacle—an avenue the length and width of the range; the long, slender, grey shafts, the milky-way of arching branches, and the moon-like lakes all clearly defined and shining on the blue sky. How excitedly such an addition to astronomy would be gazed at! But these lakes of rivers are still more soothingly beautiful and impressive in their natural positions to those who have the eyes to see them as they lie imbedded in their meadows and forests and glacier-sculptured rocks.

When a mountain-lake is born—which is, to a young eye, a fine sight to the 1-ght—it is an irregular, expressionless crescent, inclosed in banks of gravel and boulders, deposited soon on the lower side, the rugged mount of a glacier on the upper. In this condition it remains for many a year, until at length, after the fall of some conspicuous cluster of season, the glacier recedes beyond the upper margin, leaving it open to the sun, to show, for the first time, thousands of years after its conception beneath the glacier that supposed to be its final landscape, cold and bare, is reflected in its pure depths; the winds ruffle its glassy surface, and the sun fills it with throbbing spangles, while its waves begin to lap and murmur around its leadless cheese-sun-spangles and stars in only flowers, the birds and the snow its only visitors. Meanwhile the glacier continues to recede, and numerous rills, still younger than the lake itself, bring down glacier-mud, sand-grains and pebbles, giving rise to margin-rings and plats of soil. To these places where the fatty matter of the milk had spread. Such a process, however, was merely mechanical, and the results very crude.

A great number of sympathetic inks may be obtained by means of reactions known to chemistry. For instance, write on paper with a colorless solution of sugar of lead; if the water that is used for the solution be pure, no trace of the writing will remain when it becomes dry. Now hold the paper over a jet of sulphuretted hydrogen, and the characters will immediately appear on the paper, of an intense black color. The following recipes for inks of this kind are more simple: If writing be executed with a dilute solution of sulphate of iron, the invisible characters will appear of a beautiful blue, if the dry paper be brushed over with a pencil full of a solution of yellow prussiate of potash; or they will be visible on the paper of an intense black color. The following recipes for inks of this kind are more simple: If writing be executed with a dilute solution of sulphate of iron, the invisible characters will appear of a beautiful blue, if the dry paper be brushed over with a pencil full of a solution of yellow prussiate of potash; or they will be visible on the paper of an intense black color.

Sympathetic Inks.

UNDER the name of sympathetic inks, are designated certain liquids which, being used for writing, leave no visible trace on the paper, but which, through the agency of heat, or by the action of chemicals, are made to appear in various colors. The use of such inks for secret correspondence is very ancient. Ovid, Pliny and other Roman writers speak of ink of this kind, which, they say, was made from milk.

Sympathetic inks which are developed under the influence of heat only are much easier to use than the foregoing. The liquids which possess such a property are very numerous. Almost every one, perhaps, knows that if writing be executed on paper with a clean quill pen dipped in onion or turnip juice, it becomes absolutely invisible when dry; and that when the paper is heated the writing at once makes its appearance in characters of a brown color. All albuminoid, mucilaginous and saccharine vegetable juices make excellent sympathetic inks; so may be, also, as among the best, the juices of lemon, orange, apple and pear. A dilute solution of chloride of copper used for writing is invisible until the paper is heated, when the letters are seen of a beautiful yellow, disappearing again when heat has developed them is removed. The salts of cobalt, as the acetate, nitrate, sulphate and chloride, possess a like property. When a dilute solution of these salts is used as an ink, the writing, although invisible when dry, becomes blue when exposed to heat. The addition of chloride of iron, or of a salt of nickel, renders them green, and this opens the way for a very pretty experiment: If a winter landscape be drawn in India ink, and the sky be painted with a wash of cobalt and nickel, and the branches of the trees be clothed with leaves executed with a wash of cobalt and nickel, and the snow-clad earth be washed over with the same mixture, a magic transformation at once takes place on the application of heat, the winter landscape changing into a summer scene.—Scientific American.

"The Truth, The Whole Truth, And——"

The other day it was necessary for Mr. Pinder to go into court as a witness. Mr. Pinder knows the nature of an oath pretty well as one who would perjure himself for the biggest and best farm in Michigan. Mr. Pinder was ordered to stand up, raise his right hand, and swear that he would tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Then he sat down and a lawyer began:

"Mr. Pinder, you saw this affair, did you?"

"I did."

"Well, state to the jury what took place."

"Well, I was sitting in the house, and my wife suddenly called——"

"Never mind your wife, Mr. Pinder," interrupted the lawyer.

"Why, sir, my wife called to——"

"Never, mind your wife, I say! I want to know what you know."

Mr. Pinder had been sworn tell the truth, and the whole truth, but right at the outset the lawyer wouldn't let him do either one. Then he began:

"I was sitting in my house, when——"

"I don't want to know what happened in your house, a fight took place in the street, and if you were on the spot I want to know it."

"Well, I heard loud talking, and——"

"I want to know if you saw the defendant strike the plaintiff," interrupted the lawyer.

Mr. Pinder had sworn to tell all about it in a truthful manner, but he was now ordered to leave out more than half of "the whole truth" and begin where it suited the lawyer.

"When I crossed the street a woman said——"

"I don't care what a woman said, sir!" shouted the lawyer.

What that woman said should have been told, according to the oath taken, but the lawyer wouldn't have it.

"Well, I saw two men fighting—the plaintiff and defendant here," observed Mr. Pinder.

"Do you swear that these were the men?"

Mr. Pinder had sworn to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," and the lawyer turned right about and hinted that he might not have seen the men he had sworn he saw!

"These were the two men," he answered.

"And you saw blows struck?"

"I did."

"Now, we claim that not a single blow passed!" shouted the lawyer.

He was defending a man with a black eye and a busted nose, who had been arrested while fighting, and Mr. Pinder had seen the fight, and yet he claimed that Pinder didn't see a blow struck.

"I heard——"

"No matter what you heard."

Mr. Pinder had heard plaintiff dare defendant to strike him; and he had sworn to tell the truth, and yet the lawyer forced him into perjury. He wouldn't let him tell the whole truth nor even half of it.

"Did you see blows passed?" resumed the lawyer.

"I did."

"And you saw the plaintiff strike the defendant first?"

"No, sir; the defendant struck first."

"What! Do you know what you are swearing to? Didn't you just take an oath to tell the truth in this case?"

"I did."

"And now are you trying to mislead the jury by suppressing part of the truth—by telling what you wish to and suppressing what you don't?"

"No, sir; dust as I heard——"

"You heard! We don't want to know what you heard!"

Mr. Pinder didn't want to suppress anything, but he was forced to; he wanted to tell all about it, but they wouldn't let him; he wanted to tell the whole truth, but they wouldn't have it. They made him perjure himself while swearing to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.—Detroit Free Press.

A Pretty Story of Garibaldi.

It is Gen. Bardonne who describes the private career of Garibaldi as a mighty hunter in the following anecdote: "One evening in 1861, as the General was going home, he met a Sardinian shepherd lamenting the loss of a lamb out of his flock. Garibaldi at once turned to his staff, who were with him, and announced his intention of securing the monstrous ram. A grand expedition was immediately organized. Lanterns were brought and the whole officers of many a campaign started off full of zeal to hunt the fugitive, and veteran voices need to command were soon heard shouting in every valley and on the mountain range. After an hour or so of this no lamb was found, and the soldiers were ordered to their beds. Next morning Garibaldi's attendant found him in bed fast asleep. He was surprised at this, for the General was always up before anybody else. The attendant went off softly and returned in half an hour. Garibaldi still slept. After another delay, the attendant waked him. The General rubbed his eyes, and so did his attendant when he saw the old warrior take from under the covering a big lost lamb and bid him convey it to the shepherd."—*M. D. JOHN, Chief of the Big Meadow Pines, is no slouch of a civilized hunter, instead of spending his days in hunting at the Sink of Humboldt, which is literally alive with ducks, geese, swans and pelicans, Capt. Large and Small Farms.

A fault of the Americans is to attempt to accomplish too much. Wealth or ambition leads us to make the effort to arrive at the end without the trouble of reaching it by carefully traversing the ground lying between it and the beginning. And yet there is only one way to accomplish a thing, however it may be its nature, and that is to walk or ride the entire distance. We cannot skip a single foot of the way. This principle lies at the foundation of all real success. If duty in any particular be neglected, or if details are slighted, anything that may be thought serious will only be partial, and it will not be unlikely that complete and disastrous failure will result. A farmer who neglects a thousand acres will not be as successful as the one who thoroughly cultivates a hundred. He may, and no doubt will, have more grain when the harvests shall ripen, but when he attempts to calculate his profits, he must calculate them as per acre, and if the yield of his thousand acres is less per acre than the owner of the hundred acres has realized, his success, in other things being equal, has not been as great as his neighbor's.

There has been an unfortunate tendency, in this country, to aspire to the possession and cultivation of large farms. Especially is this true in the West, in many sections of which land is cheap, and in all sections of which it is fertile. The ability of the soil to produce heavily, with even a limited cultivation, has stimulated the desire to plant and sow immense tracts. The results need not be told here. If the farms have been very large, failure has always been noted, and in some cases bankruptcy has been the final end. Of the number of large farmers that are have personally known—that is, those who cultivated extraordinarily large farms—we have no knowledge of a single successful one. In the majority of instances the waste arising from neglect has been quite sufficient to ruin anybody, and this neglect is inseparable from unusually large farming operations. The fact that a man is himself a good farmer will not prevent it, for he is largely dependent on help, and help, never the most careful or competent, suffers considerable demoralization when employed on a farm steadily in very large numbers. We knew, several years ago, an excellent farmer, who attempted farming on a very large scale, and it is safe to say that when he died his property was not worth 50 per cent. of its value at the time he commenced his farming operations. The demoralization of help, to which reference has been made, was particularly noticeable, and crops were not half cultivated, stock was injured for the lack of care, buildings and fences became dilapidated, and, everything, indoor and out, bore the appearance of haste, neglect and decay. Even the man himself, after awhile, partook of the same general character, and became a "slouch."

Perhaps it may be thought by some that these difficulties could easily be overcome, but experience and observation do not warrant the belief. Such failures as the one which recently happened in the State of Illinois are not encouraging in the direction of concluding that a farmer, because he is a good farmer and an enterprising one, can successfully cultivate 40,000 acres of land, or half or quarter that quantity. Farming requires too much ability and sound judgment to expect that the owner of such a farm could gather about him enough of competent assistants to carry it on, even if there were no difficulties in the way of maintaining its efficiency after it was once secured. Everything about the farm demands the greatest of care. If a board is knocked off a building, and is not replaced, there is necessarily some loss, and there may be considerable. If the cows are treated unkindly, there will be less milk and its products. If the harvest is neglected in the way of grooming or protection from the elements, the feed-bin must be drawn upon more heavily to keep them in condition, and thus we might go through the entire details of the farm, and see how little it requires to cause leaks in the profits. But the experienced farmer knows that his constant supervision is usually necessary to secure success, and knows that a large proportion of farm hands will slight their work, if they have the opportunity. He knows that there are men who if left to themselves will destroy more than the amount of their wages, and that there are those who will ruin in a few weeks the best cow or team that ever existed. But the farmer who attempts to cultivate a 40,000 or a 5,000-acre farm cannot possibly have the supervision of everything.

The desire for large farms, however, has led to other and very burdensome evils. Men have started in with a quarter section, and in time have made themselves a comfortable home, and have lived happily on the product therefrom from debt. But the greed for more land has tempted them to purchase on credit and run in debt for the additional machinery necessary. Once in debt, they have in many instances never got out again, and if they were fortunate enough not to be sold at what they had, they dragged through life under a heavy burden, when it was possible in that time to have secured a good farm and to have been independent. These instances and those similar to those before stated, have been numerous enough to satisfy anyone of the impracticability of farming on a very extensive scale, and there is no excuse for any respectable struggle. One bottle, 25 cents; five bottles for $1.00.

Milk, Butter, Cheese.

As in any other pursuit, the farmer desires to make the most money with the least labor and risk—at least to undergo as little labor and risk as possible. Sometimes he will abandon a mixed husbandry, in which he has been all his life profitably engaged, and convert his farm to dairy purposes alone—that is, producing milk for the city market by a cheese factory. This relieves the family of a great deal of labor and the farmer himself from much hard work and looking after. It is true he has his responsibilities with his cattle and the pastures and selling crops; still it is a release from at least one-half of his labors. But in many cases—we think we can say in a majority of cases—he does not find it to pay nearly so well as the old system; that it becomes irksome from its sheer monotony; and that he does not feel that his position of a farmer is quite up to the mark. He becomes uneasy, and longs for the past life; and some day, after selecting from his stock of cattle a portion of the best of them, sells the rest off, and starts in a small farm again and the good old way in which, though working harder, and requiring more attention from his family, he found his true position, his true happiness, as well as greater gains.

We know a number who have relinquished the mere routine production of milk, and have resumed the old and more satisfying system of raising wheat and corn, rye and oats, a little buckwheat, an acre or two of potatoes, from ten to twenty acres of timothy if within reach of a market; clover for the cattle; a field of turnips and another of rutabagas; a half-dozen bullocks for the shambles, a half-dozen head of good cows from which to make butter; a dozen to fifty sheep for sale and for home consumption; a good team or two of swine together with the usual other little matters and things making up the real business of the farmer who lives within reach of a ready market. Even in relation to the matter of butter alone, there are few who know how to make a first-class article, and who will admit that it is more profitable than to sell the milk.

As to cheese factories, those will be established only by men of capital, who are frequently not farmers at all, and, if well conducted, they will make a great deal of money; but unless they own the land and the cattle as a part of their business capital, the heavy profits will come from the farmer, who seeks to reduce his labor as well as his income at the same time, by what we regard only as an unfortunate change in his system of husbandry.—German-town Telegraph.

Brain Exhaustion.

For the last twelve months I have been afflicted with Brain Exhaustion and Nervous Prostration, and during that time have used Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, Peruvian Syrup, Iron Bitters, Sulphur Bitters, Quinine Wine, and various other remedies, from incompetent physicians, without any benefit. I was induced to try Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters, and before I had used one bottle I felt relieved. I have now used three bottles, and am entirely cured. I can recommend them to all suffering from Nervous Prostration.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

I, JOHN HANNAS, being a Blacksmith by trade, had a... often felt the want of some means whereby I could relieve me of the toil, so that I could work it a better advantage. The inducement to make many experiments with different substances which offered the best prospect of success. It was on one of these occasions that I discovered the wonderful effects of Electro upon the human system.

I had a defect in three or my fingers, which were bent or stuck in by my hand in such a manner, by contraction of the cords, that they were very troublesome to me in my daily occupation. I could not handle my tools as I wished, and often thought I would have my fingers cut off to get them out of the way. I have used everything that offered any hope of relief, but all to no effect. Well, I say, I was working with Electro Silicon at the forge, and of course held my fingers in the opening to contact with my hands.

I took no notice of the effect it had produced, until one day, wishing to use a heavy hammer, I renewed with my crooked hand, and upon trying, my surprise I found my crooked fingers straighten out, and I had so much use of them as ever. I could handle my tools as I wished and hammer a heavy piece of iron, and my whole system was the result.

I had a neighbor living about a mile from my shop who had a lame knee, caused by the muscles being contracted by rheumatism. I took him a bottle of Electro Silicon and requested him to rub it well into the knee. He did so, and at the end of three months he was able to throw away his crutches. He has since walked to my shop, a distance of over a mile, without any assistance, and is now attending to his usual business. Many others, both male and female, for miles around, have been relieved from terrible Lumbar Rheumatism, Sciatica, and Nervous Prostration, and will testify to the truth of the above statement. Pamphlets containing Testimonials, and Instructions for Self-Treatment, will be sent free to any address. Price of Electro Silicon, $1 per bottle. Prepared by me at my Electro Silicon Manufactory, 1 Lambeth Walk, London, S.E., England.

Marquette and Mackinac.

Ever since the completion of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad to the iron regions of the Upper Peninsula the feeling has been increased that railroad connection ought to be made between the saiue region and the lower peninsula. By the completion of that road Marquette, Negaunee, Ishpeming and other places of importance were brought into closer connection with Milwaukee and Chicago than with the principal cities of the States in which they are themselves situated; the farmers of Wisconsin received the benefits of a market which belongs properly to the farmers of Michigan; and the members of the Legislature from the Upper Peninsula found their most convenient route to their own State Capital, during the winter season, through three other States. The desire of a more intimate connections between the Upper and Lower Peninsulas led to the introduction, in 1873, of a resolution by Representative Buell, of Menominee, asking for a grant of Government land for the construction of a Railroad from Marquette to Mackinac. But the State conventions of both parties in Michigan had but a few months previously declared against further grants of Government lands in aid of railroads; the abuses arises from former grants and subsidies were fresh in the minds of the people; the feeling against further Congressional legislation of that character was general and pronounced, and Mr. Buell's resolution was defeated in the House when it came to a vote on the 15th of January.

A more direct and unobjectionable method of aiding in the construction of the desired railroad soon suggested itself. The so-called swamp lands in the possession of the State had been granted by the general Government to be used for the opening of roads and for the drainage of the country. In the Lower Peninsula a large proporsion of these lands had been appropriated to aid in the construction of swamp land roads and ditches, and it must be said, in in many cases, without results that afforded any fair return for the appropriations. The swamp lands in the Upper Peninsula were mostly intact. It was held that also the original grant did not contemplate railroad constructions, yet in the peculiar region between Marquette and Mackinac the development of the country and the drainage of the land would be better accomplished by the building of a railroad, with with the necessary ditches on each side, than by any number of swamp land roads. Accordingly a bill was introduced granting these lands for that purpose. After very thorough discussion it passed the House, March 13, 1873, by the very decisive vote of 73 to 13. It was amended in some particulars in the Senate, and passed that body, March 20, by a vote of 28 to 5, and the same afternoon the House concurred in the Senate amendment by a vote of 74 to 6.

The bill as amended provided that to secure the construction of the road, the Board of Control should be authorized to appropriate not to exceed ten sections of State swamp lands per mile to any railroad company that should construct and complete such railroad on or before December 31, 1875. It was also provided that the lands should be selected from the unreserved swamp lands in the counties of Mackinaw, Chippewa, Schoolcraft, and not to exceed 100 sections in Marquette county, and that they should become taxable as fast as they were earned by the company constructing the road. It was made the duty of the Board of Control to give 30 days' public notice of the letting of the contract for the construction of the road, and to let it to the responsible company which should give bonds for the completion of the road for the least number of acres of said lands.

The time which followed were not favorable to railroad building, and although several different parties took some preliminary steps, no contract was made under this act.

As the special session of 1874, an act was passed by more than a two third vote of both houses extending the time for the completion of the road two years; but still no responsible parties could be found to undertake the construction.

In 1875 an amendatory bill was introduced which passed the Senate March 4 by vote of 22 to 9, and the House April 1, vote of 57 to 7. It increased the the grant to 16 sections per mile, gave the Board of Control power to extend for one year the time for completion, if, from the financial condition of the country and the existing discredit of all railroad investments, difficulties should occur in raising money for the construction of the road; allowed the board to award and convey the number of acres earned upon the road, and exempted the unsold lands from taxation for 16 years.

In 1877 the act was further amended by extending the time for completing the road to December 31, 1879, and providing that the road should be of the ordinary Michigan gauge of track, furnished with the iron or steel rail of at least the ordinary weight on first-class railroads.

Under the latter acts there was at one time a fair prospect that the road would be built. A company was formed in the Upper Peninsula and over $10,000 expended in surveys, but on account of the depression in the iron and other local interests this company could not well raise the necessary funds, but offers to give to any other company that should be organized the reports of its surveys and any other aid that it could furnish. A contract was at last let to Dr. Leman of New York, who convinced the Board of Control that he could raise the necessary funds. But the hopes arising from this contract have proved delusive, and the Board of Control, seeing no prospect of its fulfillment, have taken steps to formally declare it forfeited.

The project is therefore in nearly the same condition as it was six years ago. But the history of the case shows that the people of the State desire the construction of the road. Three successive Legislatures have, by a vote of more than two thirds of their whole membership, declared in favor of liberal terms to any responsible company that would undertake the work. The same urgent reasons exist now that have existed before to make the construction of the road a matter of importance to the people of the State. The opening of a market for the products of the Lower Peninsula, the development of the wilderness country between the Sault and Marquette, now much of it inaccessible, and the bringing of the two sections closer relations, are as desirable now as ever. The existing financial conditions are better now than they have been since the first act was passed; money is more easily obtained; the value of the lands is better understood, and labor and materials are cheaper than before. A little encouragement from the Legislature, in the way of another extension of the time, if nothing else, would probably now bring about the most desirable result, which the unfortunate condition of financial affairs has hindered for five years past.—Detroit Post and Tribune.

A son of the Czarowitch put in an appearance last month, and when he was one week old, the Emperor reviewed the Keiff Artillery, and notified the grizzly veterans that this few pink pounds of humanity was commander-in-chief of the regiment.

On the 80th of last month three hundred and six thousand dollars in greenbacks were paid out at the United States Treasury to persons who were entitled to receive gold, but asked for greenbacks in preference. Only one man of all who visited the Treasury that day wanted gold.

The Washington Post, asks, "will the country, by 1880, have sufficiently recuperated from Grant to endure another attack?" To that part of the country which showed its heels at Donaldson, at Vicksburg, and all through Virginia until it fell exhausted at Appomattox, this is probably a serious question.

The Atlanta Constitution says "the Republicans still regard Grant as the coming man, and we hardly know whether to laugh or cry." Possibly; but the Constitution will remember, perhaps, that when it and its fellow rebels, a few years ago, heard that Grant was the coming man they knew mighty quick whether to laugh or cry; and they didn't laugh, either.

Some of the investigators of the House last session, were red hot to have ex-Secretary of the Navy Robeson indicted for alleged malfeasance during his term of office; but they think better of it now; and a consultation of the committee, the other day, disclosed that nearly the whole committee are satisfied that he could not be indicted. If the attempt was made, even the Democrats conceding that the charges have not been proved.

The first cargo of American wheat ever sold in Barcelona Spain, reached there a few days ago. It was Minnesota wheat, 72,000 bushels, carried by an English steamer, whose freight was $18,000. The Spanish firms which examined it were so well pleased that they immediately ordered three more full cargoes, and chartered steamers to carry them. It is thought that thirty-five cargoes will be taken within a month or six weeks. Barcelona is the great wheat port of Spain, and fifteen cargoes of wheat from Southern Russia were on the way there the day the American cargo arrived.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Crofter, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

THE public-debt statement, as published on the 24, indicates the following: Total debt (including interest of $36,841,793), $2,303,544,198. Cash in Treasury, $273,830,627. Debt, less cash in Treasury, $2,029,858,111. Increase during December, $1,233,783.

THE coinage at the United States Mint during 1878 was: Gold, $19,228,042; silver, $11,185,836; copper, $57,626.50. Total, $30,574,566.50.

THE outstanding currency, on the 1st, aggregated $303,938,584.

TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS in interest was paid at the Treasury in Washington, on the 23, all of which was paid in legal-tender notes, except $2,860, for which the holders of coupons asked and received coin checks on New York. The holders of coupons had previously received coin for them, but on the 23, for the first time, they had to take legal-tender or coin checks on New York. Many accepted legal tender, though not without some grumbling, and others demanded the coin checks. Secty Sherman is represented as being in excellent spirits, because of the smooth working of Fairs under the Resumption act. A number of telegrams received by him from different parts of the country were sent over to the President, among them one from Assistant Treasurer Hillhouse, at New York, received early in the day, to the effect that the amount of gold demanded for United States notes was insignificant. Just before the close of the office another dispatch from Hillhouse, giving the amount disbursed as $120,000, and the receipts $460,000, was received and read with much gratification. Orders for 32,000 standard silver dollars were received at the Treasury Department on the 26.

THERE were 917 failures reported in New York City during the past year, with liabilities of $65,054,468, and assets at $19,005,-581. This exceeds the record of any former year, but the large number is mainly due to the repeal of the bankrupt act.

THE resumption of specie payment at Eastern cities, on the 2d, seemed to cause but little excitement. In New York, a large proportion of the gold checks presented at the Sub-Treasury were paid in United States notes, at the request of holders.

A TORNADO visited Santa Barbara, Cal., on the night of the 24. A railway through the town was cut, and houses, fences and trees prostrated. Several lives were lost.

THE Union Cotton Press Company's warehouse, at Charleston, S. C., was burned on the morning of the 1st. About 10,000 bales of cotton were destroyed. Loss, $575,-000. The fire was the work of an incendiary.

WELLS, FARGO & CO.'S annual statement of the production of precious metals on the Pacific Coast during 1878 shows gold as follows: Nevada, $28,856,251; silver, $28,566,991; lead, $2,462,304. Total, $61,126,026, which is $17,367,152 less than the yield for 1877.

EXTREMELY cold weather prevailed generally throughout the East on the 3d. The thermometer registered from zero to 20 degrees from 7 deg. above to 18 and 20 below zero, at Cairo, Ill., it was 8 deg. below zero; at St. Louis, it below; at Richmond, Va., 7 above, and the James River was frozen over; at Bismarck, D. T., the mercury indicated 33 deg. below zero, and a correspondingly low temperature prevailed throughout the West and South. Many cases of death by freezing were reported.

THE Second Baptist Church, the fine church edifice in St. Louis, was destroyed by fire on the morning of the 3d. Loss, $120,000. On the night preceding the new Presbyterian Church at Quincy, Ill., was also burned. Loss, $50,000.

SECTY SHERMAN, on the 4th, issued the seventy-seventh call for the redemption of 6-20 bonds of 1865, consols of 1867. The call is for $10,000,000 ($6,000,00 coupons and $4,000,000 registered), principal and interest to be paid on and after the 4th of April next.

THE Postoffice Department, at Washington, on the 1st, reduced the prices of stamped envelopes, on an average, 20 per cent. throughout the entire schedule, and a telegram of the 5th says the result was such as largely-increased requisitions then being received.

A FIRE in Chicago, on the afternoon of the 4th, badly damaged the Honore Block. The Postoffice occupied a portion of the building, and was, with other occupants, hastily driven out, though all mail matter and other valuables were saved. Several narrow escapes from the upper stories of the building are reported. The damage sustained is something more than $100,000. The Postoffice has been temporarily located in the Singer Building, corner Washington and State streets.

SNOW fell at Vicksburg, Miss., and Shreveport, La., on the 3d. The weather was unusually severe throughout almost the entire South. One man was frozen to death near New Orleans. The sidewalks in that city were covered with ice and the streets were frozen hard. Ice being cut in the Potomac River, at Washington, D. C., was from eight to twelve inches thick. In Florida it was feared that the 3d's frost had done considerable damage to the orange and other fruit trees.

How She Won Him.

Two beautiful young girls, though of different temperaments and style of beauty, were in love with the same young gentleman in a northern suburb, or—which comes to the same thing in effect—desired to marry him. One was a plump, robust and vivacious brunette; the other an ethereal and sentimental blonde, of whom, one admirer—a Boston young man—said that "fastidious critics might describe her as blanched and etiolated." The young man was rather taken up with the latter, who had a bewitching way of being a graceful dreamy look, and, when refreshments were passed around, contented herself with pushing timidly at a saccharoon, like a dyspeptic nun, and the brunette felt that she must deliver a masterstroke ere the boldness or else the young man was lost, and, in the present stringency of the matrimonial market, such a catastrophe was not to be contemplated with calmness. Accordingly, a week ago last night, she left home to go to "Bologna sausage!" said the young man, somewhat nervously. "do you mean to say that an ethereal angel like Lucy feeds on Bologna sausage between meals?" "Oh, all do it," responded his companion, "and in that manner ruin their stomachs and complexions, so that they look delicate." "But it won't be different if she had a home of her own, where she could do her own housework, and have a variety of plain food, which——" "But if she had a home of her own she wouldn't do her own housework, and be too delicate for that, and her husband'd have to hire a servant girl that would eat as much almost as she'd carry away for her friends. Poor Lucy's poor dear elder sister tried it, and overtaxed her strength, and for nine years she has been an invalid, and has to live on fruit, wines, wings of chickens and dry champagne, three pints a day. Poor crotchured! I quit," them I know I seem vulgarly coarse and actuating to many young men, because I eat so heartily, but since I was two years and eighteen months old I haven't cost ma nor pa papa a dollar for doctor's bills, I can carry a scuttle of coal in each hand heaping full, and I always get up before the servant-girl in cold weather to light the fires—the sensation is so delightful; just like electricity and champagne." This put Lucy's pretty head fairly to work, and it was 2:20 a. m. on Monday before she let him out of the front door. On Monday afternoon he was seen at a well-known jeweler's getting a set of pearl and sapphires charged for something more becoming to a lady of dark complexion. Alas, poor Lucy! —Chicago Tribune.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—Hiram Lee, the son of the Sheriff of the county, was shot through the back, by Wm. Nutt, at Sioux Head, N. C., the other day, and killed. The difficulty grew out of some misunderstanding about a young lady in the neighborhood. Both of the men had been paying the lady marked attention. Nutt sent word to the deceased that he must cease his visits to the girl. As Hamilton Lee was returned to his demand. The men met on a public road, next morning, with the result given.

—South Boston was recently the scene of a dastardly murder. James H. Fox, a young man, a teamster, was sitting in his tenement punishing his sauey three-year-old girl by slapping her face, when his brother-in-law, Edward Donovan, an overgrown schoolboy, seventeen years of age, took umbrage and struck Fox. Fox returned the blow, who, upon Donovan left with a challenge to Fox to come on the street and he would fix him. Fox, however, remained in the house. In ten minutes Donovan returned, armed with an ugly-looked knife made from an old file, and began a fight, which ended in less than a minute by his burying the knife in Fox's bowels.

—A bloody tragedy is reported near Keokuk, in the vicinity of Lee County. Lt. Wiley Holmes, married to a sister of Beu Talbert, had some family misunderstanding, and Talbert shot Holmes in the back. Both happened to be hunting deer, and met on the road. Talbert ordered Holmes to halt, and aimed his gun at him. Holmes raised his gun, and both fired simultaneously, each shot taking effect. They then dismounted and fired again. Talbert fell in the road and Holmes walked to a house near by, failing exhausted on the doorsteps. Talbert came up and stepped over Holmes, into the house, asking for a gun to finish him. He, too, fell on the floor, and both expired in a few minutes after. Holmes was twenty-three and Talbert nineteen.

—A most unfortunate accident recently occurred on the railroad between Sheridan and Mendon. Mr. Powell procured a license in this city to marry Miss Phil. O'Brien, of Sheridan. Mr. Powell went to Sheridan to consummate his marriage. After arriving there he found that a marriage-license issued in Lenawee County would not answer in Placer, and they resolved to return to Wheatland that evening. A hand-car was procured, and the parties started on the return trip. They had not gone another party started from Wheatland about the same time to go to Sheridan on another hand-car to attend the wedding. Neither car carried a light, and some time between the two places the cars came together, and the intended bride received her left leg below the knee. Limbs while sitting on the edge of the car which rendered the amputation of the limb necessary.—Marysville (Cal.) Advertiser.

—A few evenings ago, a young man named Adams started from Columbia to ride into the horseback. He thought that it would be more pleasant to ride on the railroad track, and striking the track just out of Columbia spurred his horse into a gallop. Adams says that he thought his familiarity with the track would keep him out of danger, but all at once the horse came to a bridge which was without flooring. Adams was thrown over the horse's head as the poor animal's legs went through. When he recovered consciousness he found himself hanging head down under the bridge, one foot being caught in the stirrup. He was so bruised that he could not lift himself, and there he remained in the greatest agony. There was a whistle and a roar, and he knew that a train was coming. As the wheels crashed over the bridge he felt a shock. The cowcatcher had thrown the horse off, but the saddle was wedged in between sills. He hung until sunrise and was then rescued almost dead.—Houston (Tex.) Telegram.

—would not, though he might be ever so hungry, eat supper until I was there to make and pour out the tea. "It tastes so much better from your hand, Sis," he used to say.

Nathaniel was a printer, and had been a fine, stalwart, singing, whistling fellow until that dreadful day in September when he met with the terrible accident which resulted in the loss of his right arm.

Since then he had been on the invalid list, and sang, and whistled, and joked no more. We had, fortunately, some money saved when the misfortune came upon us, but it was now almost exhausted. And Nat began to worry about that, among other things; but I never lost heart. Why should I? I had youth, health and strength and twelve dollars a week. And we could manage not to starve or freeze on twelve dollars a week, and Nat's overcoat and my cloak could both be turned, and—somebody was coming home soon.

Widow Winterpippin—do I hear her!—proved an angel of goodness during our trouble, coming to sit with Nat herself when his arm was at the worst; —I had to go to the store after the first few days, or the salary would have ceased, though they did, for a wonder, give me an extra half-hour at noon when I went home to lunch—sending Nannie to wait on him when he was getting better, and making all sorts of nice dishes to tempt his appetite, and lending him all the nicest books and keeping the room bright with beautiful flowers. But it wasn't this kindness that made Nat fall in love with her. Oh, no! for he had fallen in love with her long before, and was on the point of telling her so when that cruel machinery grasped his arm.

"But I mustn't give her up now, Susie," he said to me—we had no secrets from each other—"though I love her more than ever. Twould have been no match, in a worldly sense, for her, before—a printer with only what he earned from week to week, and a pretty, young widow, owning houses and lands sufficient to give her an income of a thousand a year. But now it is simply impossible. Disabled for life, I must make up my mind to be a burden on you, and see her marry——"

"You'll do no such thing, Natiuniel," cried I. "Will you come over your? It seems to me that the people who are the jolliest when they are jolly are the bluest when they are blue. One would think you'd look both arms and legs to hear you talk. Do you forget your favorite motto, 'All desperandum,' to say nothing of 'Up, guards, and at 'em?'"

But Nat continued very low in his spirits, all I could do or say. And this was a fortnight before the Christmas Eve before that Christmas Day.

The kettle had just begun to boil next morning, and I had just called out "Merry Christmas" to Nat, hearing Nannie in his own room, when Widow Winterpippin's blue-eyed little maid knocked at the door, with a "Merry Christmas," a giggle and a note from her mistress. The note read:

DEAR MRS. MCCHILLY—Will you and Mr. McChilly favor me with your company to dinner at two o'clock? Nathaniel will be with us, and I have a few friends coming in this evening at seven o'clock."

"And I've got a note for everybody in the house, Miss Lucy," said the upper, miss. So don't cook no dinner, miss," said the little maid, laughing outright. (This little maid was almost always laughing, in which respect she much resembled her black-eyed mistress.) "Say we'll come with pleasure, Nannie," said I. "Yes, miss," and away she flew.

And at seven precisely, the invited guests were assembled in the widow's pretty parlor. Dear me! How pretty it was. Christmas greens were festooned all around the walls, and anchors, and wreaths, and hearts, and crosses were hung wherever they could be hung, and above the mantel, "Merry Christmas," in large dark green letters, brightened by crimson berries greeted us as we entered the door. And there were stands filled with lovely geraniums and begonias, and lilies in each window, and a splendid fire in the grate, and most charming of all there was the new herself in a pearl-gray silk, with scarlet flowers in her hair.

Then Nathaniel—poor fellow, how his empty sleeve annoyed him—and Mr. and Mrs. McChilly and her grandchildren were already there—the old lady in the easiest chair in the room, nearest the fire, with a glass of lemonade, of which she was very fond (how did Widow Winterpippin manage to find out everybody's little weaknesses in the way of eating and drinking?) on a small round table by her side, and the grandson and his wife looking over the photograph album in a cosy corner.

Mr. and Mrs. Rose and the three Rosebuds, as we called the children, we, darling, auburn-haired girls, came in at the same time we did, and Mr. and Mrs. Summer, he looking worn and haggard and she with traces of tears around her beautiful eyes—and the baby—made their appearance a few minutes later.

"And now that we are almost all here," said Widow Winterpippin—we wondered who else was to come—"we'll have a dance to begin with. You will play, Mrs. Summer? Nannie can hold the baby."

But Mrs. Summer blushed and said she "never played, you know."

"But you can," insisted the widow, in her genial way. "You surely have not forgotten. I used to hear you playing so much and so well when you first moved here, and Mr. Summer sang, then, too. Many a happy hour have I passed listening to you both." And Mr. Summer, with a conscious, contrite look in his face, put his arm around his wife and led her to the piano.

Then Nathaniel took the widow, and Mr. Summer Mrs. McChilly's granddaughter by marriage, and Mrs. McChilly's grandson Mrs. Rose, and Mr. Rose me, and we had an old-fashioned quadrille dance in the old-fashioned way—and a jig to end with. And Mrs. McChilly declared it made her feel like dancing herself, and she would have danced, too, I believe, if it hadn't been for her rheumatic foot. As it was, she beat time to the jig-time with her cane, until her arm was so tired she couldn't beat any longer, and Nannie and the baby took it and beat away, utterly recardless of time, until all the ladies had made their final curtseys to their partners.

After the dance we had a lovely ballad from Mr. Summer, who had a fine tenor voice, and a comic song from Mr. Rose, who had a voice suited to it. The comic song had a silly, rollicking chorus, in which the company all joined with as much earnestness as though their lives depended upon their doing so.

"Tra-la-la-la-la-la
Tra-la-la-la-la will do."

And then supper. Such a supper! Roast turkey, cranberry sauce, mince pie, crisp celery, home-made bread, pickles, tongue, stewed oysters, candied and wax dolls (the dolls beside the children's plates). And when we were all through and back to the parlor again, sitting in a half-circle around the grate-fire, a cup of fragrant tea or coffee in every hand, Widow Winterpippin, who sat in the center of the half-circle, said: "And now, if no one has any objection, I would like to tell you a wonderful dream I had last night."

"Any objection!" "No, indeed!" "Delighted to hear it!" from all sides. And, while the Summer baby crowed itself to sleep in its mother's arms, and the Rosebuds, on the floor at their father's feet—each with her own doll clasped to her breast—drooped their shining heads until they sank upon the shoulders Nannie had thoughtfully placed near them, the chairs in the half-circle were drawn closer and all eyes were fastened on the Widow Winterpippin's sunny face.

"I went to bed last night," began the widow, in a low voice, "very tired." "I should think so," and every woman in the listener.

"And I began to dream directly. And everybody in the house was in that dream," the widow went on. "Yes, children and all. I thought it was Christmas night, just as it is now, and Nannie and I were asking just as we did to-night, for the company to arrive. And they began to arrive as the clock struck seven. First came Mr. and Mrs. Rose and the Rosebuds, looking so smiling and happy that I said at once, 'I have good news to tell me.'

"Mrs. McChilly—dear, kind Mrs. McChilly—(Mrs. McChilly sat bolt upright in her chair and closed her lips firmly as her nose, which seemed to say, has paid the doctor's bill,' Mrs. Rose began. And promised, she having so many business acquaintances, to look out for a situation for me,' said Mr. Rose. 'And she says to-day is the birthday of the Savior and He dearly loves children, and she is going to love us for his sake and be our friend always as long as we are good,' said the children, beginning to sing the Sweet By-and-By so loudly that we did not hear Mr. Aubrey come in; but there he was, his face glowing and his eyes sparkling. (Mr. Aubrey was the grandson with whom Mrs. McChilly had quarreled); and he cried out, 'God bless her! my mother's mother. I knew she couldn't stay mad long. She's forgiven me and kissed Alice.' (Alice was the young girl with whom he had fallen in love without the old lady's permission.)

"And all of a sudden there was Mrs. McChilly among them, being welcomed with loving words, and hugs and smiles —the eldest Rosebud had a glass of lemonade ready for her—and saying, 'Dear, dear, what is a little money to gratitude and affection like this?'

"Nothing, answered Mr. Summer, who was there all of a sudden, too, with his wife and the baby, looking as handsome as an old when I first saw him, nearly two years ago, and as for Mrs. Summer, her eyes were like stars and her cheeks like roses, and she stole softly to my side, while he was tossing the baby and singing a merry song to it, and whispered: 'A promise has been my Christmas gift, a promise worth all the gold and jewels in the world.' And then Susie Bracket danced in and shyly held up a letter from somebody far away, that I might see and rejoice with her. And Nathaniel—what are a ridiculous part of the dream that about Nathaniel Bracket was. Really, I don't think I can tell it."

"Oh, but you must!" I cried.

"Indeed you must!" they all cried.

"Well if I must, I must," said the widow, with a sweet, little nervous laugh. "I thought Nathaniel followed me into the dining-room, where I had gone to take a last look at the supper table—oh, it's too ridiculous!"

"Nothing of the sort," said Mrs. Summer. "I don't believe it. I've no doubt it was the most sensible thing Nathaniel ever did—in a dream."

"And please go on," begged his wife.

"And he took my hand," the widow went on, "and said—oh, I can't tell you all I dreamed he said, but he ended by saying, 'And so, of course, I must think of you no longer—a poor, crippled fellow like me.' And I said——"

"What did you say?" cried Nathaniel, springing to his feet and looking eagerly toward her, totally forgetful of the rest of the company.

"Nathaniel Bracket, you're an idiot!"

"Just as I expected," murmured poor Nat, sinking into his chair again.

"'If you have lost your arm—your right arm,'" the widow calmly proceeded, "'you haven't lost your head, and that head, as I happen to know, contains the usual, perhaps a little more than the usual, amount of brains, and it, as I hear, a thousand or two will give you an interest in Tom Allen's business, why what is to prevent me, having a little money at my command and no one to take care of but myself, lending it to you—for the sake of your sister, of whom I am very fond? Or, if you won't look at it in that way, why can't I become a partner, a very silent one, and you manage for me, taking a fair equivalent for your services?' And that's the end——"

"Never!" shouted Nat, springing from his chair once more and taking a few steps toward her. "The dream never ended in that way. Nathaniel made some further remark, I'm sure he did."

"I believe he did," said the widow, knitting her pretty brows, as though in thought, while a rosy blush overspread her face, "but dreams grow so shadowy at the last and this became so very indistinct after I had spoken of going into the printing business myself that I can scarcely remember——"

"That Nat Bracket said," prompted Nathaniel, "God bless you for a darling! and I'll accept the offered loan on condition that you'll add to it a Christmas gift—a gift above all price—your precious self."

"Well, well, how did you ever know?" exclaimed the widow in pretended surprise.

"Can't imagine," said Nat, his eyes sparkling with fun for a moment, and then, as he rose from her seat, he came and stood before her and said entreatingly, "But I don't know what answer you dreamed you made."

"Nor I," laughed the widow.

"But I do," said Mrs. McChilly, with an emphatic rap of her cane; "I do—Mrs. Nathaniel Bracket."

And we all shouted and clapped our hands like a parcel of children, and then we all (not one of us, I'm sure, could have told why) cried a little and were quietly feeling for our handkerchiefs to wipe away the tears, when the old lady spoke again, looking down on the Rosebuds, who were still sleeping. "I will be a friend to these little ones and their parents," she said, "a good friend. That part of the dream shall come true. As for my grandson——"

"Here he is," screamed Nannie, with a hysterical laugh, as she flung open the door that led into the dining-room.

And there he was, to be sure, with his sweetheart on his arm, and in an instant they were both kneeling before their grandmother, with one of the old lady's wrinkled hands in blessing on each bowed, young head.

Mr. Summer turned from the pretty tableau and bent and kissed his wife, and softly whispered something to her that made her "eyes like stars" indeed, as she exclaimed in a voice trembling with joy. "My part of the wonderful dream has already come true."

"And mine came true this morning," said I, as I took the letter from my pocket.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many Physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an estimated fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of Lung Diseases. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who were predisposed to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Colds, settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by your Druggist, Geo. W. Crouter.

MONEY TO LOAN, on good real estate security. Inquire of A. H. Upright, Charlevoix, Mich. 16-1yr

The Township Board are purchasing quite an extensive addition to the Township Library.

The Intermediate Department has been opened in the Charlevoix school, with Miss Annie Cooper as teacher.

The steamers on the route between Grand Haven and Milwaukee have stopped running on account of ice. They can come up here and run until it thaws out down there.

Personal.—L. D. Bartholomew of this village leaves soon for the outside world. He will visit Chicago, Spring Lake, and other points, and will attend the session of the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. before he returns.

—Geo. W. Crouter, druggist, of this place, left yesterday to attend a two month's course in a dental college.

—B. F. Ingalls, and O. B. Hennikn, of Petoskey, were in town Wednesday last.

—H. O. Rose, of Petoskey, paid Charlevoix a visit Friday.

—C. J. Wooden, Supervisor of Bear Lake Township, was in town yesterday.

MONEY TO LOAN on good real estate security, by A. A. Blenkby, Attorney at Law, Kalkaska, Mich. 16-1yr

Congressman Hubbell was reported lately to have been compelled by illness to go home, but Washington advices say he is there and hard at work in framing the harbor and river bill.

The discount on Canada money is partly attributable to the fact that our American banks cannot pay them out without incurring a tax of 10 per cent, under the United States revenue laws.

Niles says we sit at one end of a "one-horse telegraph line." We shall write to the President of the Western Union Telegraph Co., and tell him about that. Niles must apologize.

The ice harvest has commenced here. The ice is not so thick as is desirable, but the experience of last winter has taught Charlevoix people to "make hay while the sun shines." Ice six inches thick is better than none at all.

Senator Bell, of this District, is chairman of the committee on "Immigration," and is a member of the "Judicial Committee." Of the committee on "Canals and River and Harbor Improvements," and the committee on "Expiring Laws." Representative Pailthorp is a member of the committees on "Judiciary," and "Public Lands."

Cold? Why, bless you, no. All the cold weather we experience here is in reading the weather reports from the frigid latitudes south of us. From all directions come tidings of extreme cold, the thermometer ranging as low as 30 and 40 degrees below zero. Even in Southern Kansas, that sunny land, they have had it 12 degrees below zero. In Charlevoix and the Pine Lake region at no time this winter has the mercury been below nine degrees above zero! Sell out down there and come up north into a milder climate!

A Justice of the Peace of Norwood Township has been invited by the Highway Commissioner of this Township to waltz up and settle his little bill of $15 for trotting his horses across the bridge. A lively time is anticipated. Some one must be made an example of. We notice considerable carelessness lately in driving across the bridge. Either have the law enforced, or take down the sign boards.

The Sentinel vs. "The Orator."

From the Petoskey Record.

We have received the following communication from Mr. Niles, Supervisor of Springvale, relative to an article which appeared in the last number of the Charlevoix Sentinel:

The Charlevoix Sentinel, in a half-column article devoted to me, abounding in flings and personalities, dubs me "The Orator." While I do not propose to retort by the same mode of warfare, which is neither gentlemanly, nor altogether in keeping with the legitimate province of a high-toned, moral educator, such as the Sentinel claims to be, I should be heartily glad to discuss the merits of any live question pertaining to the real interests of Charlevoix county, such as the removal of the county seat, the bridge question, or the reduction of the salaries of Charlevoix county officials, either publicly, or through the columns of the Sentinel. Mr. Smith, and the same gentleman whose John prounction the "Orator" article is, both take different views of these questions from myself, and exasperated by the efforts I make to honestly and faithfully represent the wishes of my constituents, resort to the tactics of the coward, blackguard, and pettifogger, to squelch me, not daring, from the weakness of their cause, to engage in a full, frank, and good natured discussion of those questions on their merits. W. C. Niles.

From the Petoskey Democrat.

As the thing that sits at one end of a one horse telegraph wire, distributes mail to the people of Charlevoix, and edits the biggest humbug in Michigan, swells up like a big blow snake, and scatters his low dirty slang broadcast for the express purpose of injuring any and every one who dares to speak in defense of right, I ask the privilege of saying through your columns that hereafter I don't propose to take any notice of his dirt throwing. But if the editor of the Sentinel or any other person of Charlevoix wishes to come to the front, and discuss the questions that interest the taxpayers of Charlevoix county, in a gentlemanly way, we are ready to meet him in public face to face, or through the press, otherwise we shall leave him to die the death of those who use slang for argument.

Ed. of Sentinel please copy.

W. C. Niles.

One newspaper not being deemed sufficient to contain the brain-work of the great agitator, the columns of two are secured. As a double-barreled slinger Niles is a success. Now, we never censured Mr. Niles, nor any of his colleagues for voting as they thought the interests of their respective sections demanded, neither shall we. We only retorted when Mr. Niles heaped abuse upon Charlevoix alone, when five or six other Townships were equally as deserving of his distribes. And that which he considered blameworthy was the exercise of the same privileges that he claimed for himself and his followers. He wishes to have a "fair, frank, good-natured discussion" of the questions at issue!!! Shades of Moses! If fairness, frankness or good nature characterized his conduct on these matters this controversy would not have occurred. The opposite of these traits has marked his course on the Board since he became a member of it. "The biggest humbug in Michigan." Yes. About the time we called Mr. Niles an orator the Sentinel was the ablest and best journal in the two counties, and its editor a gentleman and a scholar. We had Mr. Niles, word for this. As for the discussion to which he challenges us, there is only one question which we care to discuss with Mr. Niles, and that is a little matter of debit and credit on our ledger which has his name at the head of the page.

Five degree below zero at Petoskey on the 15th. Five degrees above zero at Charlevoix the same day.

Mr Pailthorp recently gave notice in the House of Representatives that he would introduce a bill for the incorporation of the village of Petoskey.

The Traverse Bay Eagle has flopped again. It puts itself on record in the Michigan Almanac for 1879 as "Independent." The Nationals of Grand Traverse now have no organ.

Notaries.—The following appointments of Notaries Public for Charlevoix county were confirmed by the Senate on the 16th: E. H. Green, W. A. Smith, J. M. Eaton, H. R. Miller, A. Buttars, James, A. Kent.

The carpenters of Charlevoix are anticipating lively times in building next season. Several of our citizens are figuring on new residences, numerous cottages at the resort will be erected, and one or more business buildings are contemplated.

How Sanscript Recalled Recollections of Fifty Years Ago.

The boys were coasting down Sycamore-street Hill, last evening, when John Sanscript and his wife came along. They had been up on Baltimore street visiting, and were on their way home.

"Just see them boys," said John, as he braced up at the intersection of Mulberry street. "It really reminds me of the days when I was a lad. Do you know, Jane, that I used to coast down hill on a sled that way?"

"Did you, John?"

"Why, yes; but that's fifty years ago!"

Sanscript scratched his head contemplatively, and then muttered, sotto voce: "Darn my grand-daddy's buttons, if I don't try it!"

"Try what, dear?" anxiously asked Mrs. S.

"I'm going to coast just once, to revive recollections of fifty years ago."

"Now, John, if I were you——"

"But you are not me, so don't interfere. Here, sonny (to a lad just puffed up the hill with his sled); here, sonny, I'll give you a quarter to let me slide down on your sled once."

The bargain was eagerly nailed and clinched.

"Be keerful, old man," urged the boy, as Sanscript squatted rather awkwardly on the sled; "be keerful, I say, and don't let her sunk out way or t'other till she brings up, or you'll get smashed."

"Never mind, younker," assured John; "I've been here afore—some years afore, indeed."

But what will never be known, for just then the sled, of its own accord, started down hill, and even John himself has not since been able to recall what he was about to observe. The surprise at the sled's unexpected movement was general.

"Look out," yelled the boy.

"Oh, John," screamed Mrs. Sanscript.

"Whoa, there!" yelled John.

But the sled wouldn't whoa. It seemed to have set off down that hill to beat its best time. John had chance only to clutch hold of both sides and hold his breath for fear the wind would blow off the top of his head. The only thought he had time to foster was that the boy must have greased the sled's runners as a practical joke. And if this was coasting, he had never coasted, if his recollection served him right.

Two-thirds the way down the hill the sled struck an ice hummock, and immediately his course was changed to a parabolic curve.

Whack! bang! crash! clink!

The bringing up was awfully sudden and uncertain. Sanscript and the sled disappeared as abruptly as a shooting-star. The latter lay shivered to stoms against a lamp-post, and Sanscript lay shivering in the grocery cellar opposite. When Mrs. Sanscript got there she was filled with the lamp-post and stopped the vehicle. Sanscript rose like a circus-leaper and went right on turning twenty somersaults to the second. He went through the grocery window as the circus-leaper goes through a paper hoop. All the gingerbread horses and candy apples and other Christmas luxuries were disarranged, of course. Sanscript's body struck a Western Reserve cheese on the counter, scattering the skippers in consternation. The old skipper bounded five feet at an obtuse angle, touching again for a second at the top step of the cellar stairs in the rear of the store, and then, continuing like a diver into the Platonic depths below, he went feet foremost through the head of a hogshead, filled with something soft. At first it was uncertain whether the contents were Orleans molasses or melted glucose. Before he had time to investigate, the grocer and the two policemen came down. The unhappy old boy was lifted out of his sweet pickle and hauled off to the station-house on a charge of malicious destruction of property. The grocer appeared soon after, and compromised by John paying the following bill:

Window sash	$10 00
Crushed sugar	12 00
Hogshead molasses	6 25
Christmas goods	1 50
Total	$29 75

Then the boy came in with a bill of $5 for his sled, to say nothing of the loss of a suit of clothes, a surgeon's bill for plastering sundry skinned surfaces, and the bill of a hackman who conveyed the fainting wife home. In the cooler moments afterthought, Sanscript reckoned it up and discovered that it had cost him $109.78 to recall recollections of fifty years ago, and required but one minute and five seconds of old Father Time in which to do the recollecting.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Chinese Review.

A Chinese review has just been witnessed and described by a correspondent of the Shanghai Courier. Themen, clad in uniforms of red and blue, were ranged in two ranks, every tenth man holding a bright scarlet flag, while a sergeant in the middle gave the time to the advance by waving a huge crimson standard. At the sound of a horn, which resembled the humming of a gigantic bee, the battalion prepared to receive cavalry. Out popped a soldier brandishing a pike, which he poked at an imaginary assailant, then uttering a shriek like an owl he flourished his shield, turned a somersault, and tripplingly retired to the ranks. When everybody had popped out, brandished and poked his pike, shrieked like an owl, thrown a somersault, and retired, the big horn hummed once more, the soldiers formed in square and one of them danced gravely but energetically forward, throwing out his right leg with a graceful jerk; then bounding backward he again danced forward, this time throwing out his left. Then he jumped, he waltzed, he capered, he pranced, he turned head over heels, rolled himself well in the dust (which rose in clouds), stood on the back of his neck while he flourished his legs in the air, recovered himself, grasped wildly with his arms at nothing in particular, made a grotesque courtesy to the Viceroy and retired. With this martial spectacle the review concluded.

Capt. Boyton's Encounter With a Shark.

"I have experienced some rough usage," said Capt. Boyton. "and have had some very narrow escapes while testing my armor in the waters of Europe, but," he said, modestly, "I don't imagine it would be of much interest now to your American readers to recount them, as they have already appeared in print, in one form or another. My encounter with a shark, however, while crossing the Strait of Messina in 1877, will long be remembered by me and those who accompanied me on that eventful trip. I don't believe I would have undertaken the trip had it not been for the rumors that were in circulation that I dare not try it. The waters of this famous strait are alive with shark of the fiercest description at almost all seasons of the year, and, before my venture, it was said that but one man had ever succeeded in crossing it alive, and this was no less a personage than Saint Francisco, who, as the legend has it, threw off his cloak and passed over dry-shod. When it was given out that I was to make the attempt to swim over in my armor, the fishermen and the natives gave me up as either insane or a man in an alliance with the devil. When all my arrangements were perfected, on the 16th of March of that year, I entered the water during the morning, accompanied by two boats filled with members of the Italian press, officers of the Marine Department, and others, each of whom was thoroughly armed to protect me in case I was attacked by the man-eaters, as the sharks of the straits are justly termed. The water was somewhat rough and the current fearfully strong and hard to battle against, but I paddled away with all my strength, and succeeded in making the middle of the strait without accident or encountering any of my expected foes, although the people in the boats sighted several and shouted to me to be on my guard. All at once, when near a crested wave, I saw a dark object shooting under the water toward me, and knew that it was a shark. I raised my head and the upper part of my body from the water, and drew my long and sharp knife which I usually carry awaited his coming. I had to wait but a second, as the monster was then on to me. I saw him turn on his back and open his jaws, and then I made a lunge for his white belly with my knife. The blade penetrated the skin a short distance from the mouth, and as soon as the shark felt it he made a turn with lightning-like rapidity and hit me a fearful blow on the side with his tail, breaking one of my ribs. I still retained my hold on the handle of the knife, resolved not to lose it, and was drawn under the water by the shark. When I arose to the surface my antagonist was not to be seen, but it was evident he had got all he wanted. I was not frightened in the least by the fish, but I confess I had considerable fear of the men in the boats as they fired wildly at the shark, and I narrowly escaped the bullets intended for him. Well, to make a long story short, I succeeded in making the trip all right. The fishermen had never heard of such a thing before and dubbed me the Saint something and looked upon me with awe."

Capt. Boyton describes his trip across the Straits of Gibraltar as one among the most dangerous as well as important of his countless feats. He took the water at Tarifa, the southernmost port of Spain, and in fact of Europe, on the 26th of March, 1878, at ten minutes to eight o'clock in the morning, entering southwest, the weather being calm and the sea smooth at the time. He battled with the fierce currents, watched for the [illegible] and there throughout the day, and finally made shore in the Bay of Tangier on the Barbary Coast, at five minutes past one o'clock on the following morning. His longest trip was made on the River Tagus, from Toledo to Lisbon, this occupying twenty-seven days. The Captain describes the scenes along the banks of this river as unusually interesting. The American flag which he displayed was seen for the first time by the natives. On arriving at Lisbon he was received by thousands of people, and was very warmly welcomed.—N. Y. Graphic.

Dissecting an Elephant.

Professors and students of the Columbia Veterinary College, in Thirty-fourth street, near Third avenue, on Thursday morning dragged the carcass of the baby elephant that died the day before, in Central Park, into their court-yard. Then they prepared to hoist it to their dissecting-room. The great weight of the animal alarmed them for the safety of their pulleys and hoisting ropes. Reflection overcame this difficulty. At nightfall they had fitted up an inclined plane, placed the animal upon it, and adjourned for the morrow's work.

There gathered yesterday about the body Prof. Edward C. Spitzka, Dr. Finlay and a score of students. Before fixing the ropes and tackling, they stripped the monster of his skin, thereby saving the hoisting of 100 pounds. Slinging the body upon the table, the students prepared for the autopsy. Two seniors, George H. Berus and Charles A. Meyer, with a junior, went with sharpened knives at the abdomen, while Profs. Spitzka and Finlay cut and carved about the head.

When the examination was finished Prof. Spitzka gave an explanation of the autopsy:

"This animal was about two years old, and had not, of course, attained its full growth. Its weight was about eight hundred pounds. That spongy, honeycombed looking lump contains the air-chambers. You notice that there are two skulls. In the skull of the elephant that went mad in the Royal College of London, 400 bullets were embedded, yet only one of that number caused death. The only way to death in my opinion, when firing at the head, is through the eye.

"This is the brain; its weight is five pounds," the Professor said, Placing a human brain beside it, he continued: "The intellectual portion is well developed. The convolutions are more intricate than those of the human brain. The spinal chord is not as large as that of the horse. The trunk is rich with nerves and muscles. The eye is smaller than the horse's. The heart, you will notice, has two paints; in that it differs from all other animals. This shape is seen in the marine monster, whose shape is somewhat like that of the porpoise. The complex mass of muscle on the neck, which supports the head, is also interesting. The cause of death was pulmonary congestion. The lungs were so congested that they sank in water."

The hide was exhibited. The covering of the feet looked like large rubber shoes. The hide at this part is more than three-quarters of an inch in thickness.—N. Y. Sun.

Pay-Day.

Of all the days in the year, pay-day is probably the one most eagerly anticipated, but one most thoroughly enjoyed; there is something solid and substantial about it; it may rain great guns, but it is all the same if the sun shone. It has a social quality as well; we share the pleasure of the occasion with so many others; we know that our neighbor is looking for-ard to the same blessed period, that in common with ourselves he has a vague dread less an unforeseen balance or financial upheaval may postpone it indefinitely, —adjourn it to the hereafter, when we shall not be in need of a balance in our favor. And how many things we purchase upon the credit of that day, of which we never gave into possession, or spend our money a hundred times before we get it, thus acquiring a share of the pleasure which would result from an unlimited purchase. Oh, for this day, moreover, we banish the anticipated of a balance in favor of the Saxons, near the foodless Town of Naumburg.

The children returned to the city at night, and each one hugged and kissed Procopius as they parted, and said in a low, sweet voice:

"Spare, for our sakes, the Town of Naumburg."

The moon hung over the Saale in the golden sir, and in the late hours slipped behind the fair mountains. The sun rose fair, and the watchman looked down from the grim walls of Naumburg on the long valley; but Procopius and the Hussites were not there. The happy day never was seen in the town.

For four hundred years the Saxons have loved to recall this delightful event of history, and have celebrated it by the "Kinderfest," or "Children's Fete," or, as it is often called, "The Cherry Feast of Naumburg." This festival corresponds to our Fourth of July, and occurs on the 28th of July, and a right glad day it is to the children of Saxony. And, would you see how long the happy influence of a single good deed may last? step down when you go to Germany, drop de-n to the Saale in summer time, and eat some cherries with the children at the [illegible] a tree, in honor of the luscious General in all the world.—Hezekiah Butterworth, in St. Nicholas.

A Natural Mistake.

Not long ago, a Milford man came to this city, bent upon having a good time. He had been accordingly to understanding of the term, and when the shades of night had fallen he started for home in a condition which did not promise a rapid trip. He manifested a desire to become acquainted with all parts of the road, and over portions of it here and there, he lingered lovingly, but for what reason other people could not see. Some of the night had passed when he reached the vicinity of the rolling-mill in Fair Haven. In an enjoyable stupor he stumbled in, and sank into a lodging on the ground. Soon the workmen discovered him, and they dragged him in, where the molten iron glared on the walls and roof, the bright sparks were flying all around, the laborers seemed in the alternation of horrible shadows and lurid flame like inhabitants of a little pandemonium. The scene might naturally remind one of stories of the abode of the damned. They shook the man from Milford until his eyelids rose and revealed to him the interior of the mill in all its impressiveness. "Who are you and where do you come from?" said the workman. The frightened reveler stared about him as he replied, "Well, when I was on earth I lived in Milford."—New Haven Palladium.

THE BOY THAT OWNS EVERYTHING.

THERE is a boy who's rather small
And very odd, nor very tall—
Who prides himself on knowing more
Than any body's ever before.
He's very strong, and thinks he can
Do quite as much as any man;
And I'm inclined to think that Jim
Believes the farm belongs to him.

If you should want to use the horse,
Why Jim you must consult, of course;
And, if he choose to answer "Nay,"
At home you'll have to spend the day.
The cows the while, he owns the fetes,
The barn and all that it contains.
The pigs, the cow, the little calf,
And—oh, dear me! that not half.

Slavery greedy has he grown,
What's dad's is his, what a mire's my own.
He says, as oft with folded arms
He takes a survey of the farm,
'In seldom that he cares to look
Inside the covers of a book;
He knows enough—wise little Jim!—
So pray don't question school to him.

He'd rather be with men than boys;
He has no sense for jokes and toys,
Yet like a baby cries and grouts
If aught is taken that he owns.
He drives like John up and down
In his lofty seat that leads to town,
And none dare say, "Why do you so?"
Because he owns the horse you know!

He likes to be the only boss
About the place; it makes him cross
To have a share he others
Who will not let him have his way.
And if he is fair and just
He lives like this, he'll live alone;
For who'll care to be his chum
Though twenty farms belong to him!

THE FUNNIEST GENERAL IS ALL THE WORLD.

EVER so long ago, there lived and fought in Germany a mighty General, and he was very funny. I think he was about the funniest General in all the world.

He was very fat and very clever, and, like all fat, clever people, he loved little children. The fatter he grew, the more clever he grew, and when he had a dozen or so of children about his knees, he wasn't much of a General, as Generals go—not much of a fighting General, I mean.

But we must give the name and date of this General, and so crack the historical nut-shell, before we can set before our readers the merriment of our story. This we will do in a single paragraph, and we shall have all the rest of the story to ourselves, without our neighbor is looking for-ard to the same blessed period, that in common with ourselves he has a vague dread less an unforeseen balance or financial upheaval may postpone it indefinitely, —adjourn it to the hereafter, when we shall not be in need of a balance in our favor. PEOPLE of settled convictions—Prisoners.

"That does not help our case," said the Lords.

"A man who loves a child will not harm the parent," said the old pedagogue.

"But the Hussites do not love our children."

"Every man has a tender place in his heart," said the wise pedagogue. "But the art of breathing is very much overlooked. Being a process not depending on the will for its exercise, it is too much left to the mere call of Nature. It is, however, an act which can be influenced very materially by the will. Properly-trained singers are taught to attend very carefully to their breathing.

When brisk muscular exercise is taken, breathing is naturally active without any special effort. But when the body is at rest or engaged in occupation requiring a confined posture, and especially when the mind is absorbed in thought, the breathing naturally becomes diminished and the action of the lungs slow and feeble. The consequence is that the oxygenation of the blood is imperfectly carried on. Even in taking a constitutional walk the full benefit is not attained for want of thorough breathing.

As a remedy for this it has been suggested that there is room for what might be fitly termed breath gymnastics—to draw in long and full breaths, filling the lungs full at every inspiration, and emptying them as completely as possible at every expiration, and to acquire the habit of full breathing at all times. This mode of breathing has a direct effect in supplying the largest possible amount of oxygen to the blood and more thoroughly consuming the carbon, and so producing animal heat. It has also the very important effect of expanding the chest, and so contributing to the vigor of the system

The breath should be inhaled by the nostrils as well as by the mouth, where especially while out of doors and in cold weather. This has partly the effect of a respirator in so far as warming the air in its passage to the delicate air cells, and in also rendering one less liable to catch cold.

This full respiration is of so much importance that no proper substitute is to be found for it in shorter though more rapid breathing. In consequence a large portion of the air cells remains nearly stationary, the upper portion of the lungs only being engaged in receiving and discharging a small portion of air.

Profound thought, intense grief and other similar mental emotions always have a depressing effect on respiration. The blood unduly accumulates in the brain, and the circulation in both heart and lungs becomes diminished, unless, indeed, there be feverishness present. An occasional long breath or deep-drawn sigh is the instinctive effort in such a case, Nature making an effort to provide a remedy. This hint should be acted on and followed up. Where a muscular exercise is one in the open air even during inclement weather's an excellent antidote of a physical kind for a "rooted sorrow." And the same wise student, Procopius as they parted, and said in a instead of tying himself continuously to his desk, sigh at intervals a friend of the writer of this who studied and wrote while on his legs. Pacing his room, clip in hand with paper attached, he stopped as occasion required to pen a sentence or a paragraph.

Breathing is the first and last act of man, and is of the most vital necessity all through life. Persons with full, broad, deep chests rarely breathe freely and slowly, and large nostrils generally accompany large chests. Such persons rarely take cold, and when they do they throw it off easily. The opposite build of chest is more predisposed to lung diseases. The pallid complexion and consumptive blue veins show that oxygen is wanted, and that every means should be used to obtain it. Deep breathing also promotes perspiration, by increasing the circulation and the animal warmth. Waste is more rapidly repaired, and the skin as a depurating organ is quickened in its function to remove the used materials. Many forms of disease may be thus prevented, and more vigorous health enjoyed.—Saunders' Journal.

Authors and Disease.

It has been said that Taylor's disease was hardly understood by the physicians, and it is not even now clear whether it was dropsy or disease of the kidneys. This leads to a brief reference to authors and diseases, and by looking at the history of the former we shall find that they generally enjoy good health and live to the average of human life. Shakespeare died of a fever, and his life terminated on his fifty-second birthday. Tradition says that the disease was brought on by a drinking bout, on the occasion of a visit from Ben Jonson. "They had a merrie meeting and drank too hard, for Shakespeare died of a fever there contracted." Such, at least, is the record. Pope died of a general decline, being then fifty-six. It is surprising how so weak a frame endured even to this age, for he speaks of his life as a "long disease." Goldsmith died of fever aggravated by a severe local ailment. Johnson was old and was a sufferer from dropsy. Addison was intemperate in his latter days, and the former brought on a dropsy. Milton, though not an old man, died like one worn out with the trials and toils of life. He is the first author who is mentioned as smoking a pipe, which he found a solace during the weary hours of blindness and old age. Fielding died in middle life, of a decline, produced by fast living. Gibbons' disease was hernia, of long standing and aggravated character, terminating in dropsy. Byron died of fever. Shelley and Falconer were lost at sea. Southey died of paralysis of mind and body, and so did Scott. Wordsworth lived to see fourscore, and died on the 23d of April, the day and month which marked both the birth and death of Shakespeare. Irving died of disease of the heart, having for the last year of his life been a great sufferer. Keats, Kirk White and Pollock died of consumption, and each early in life. Burns was broken down by poverty, toil and strong drink, and died at middle age. Coleridge had a very strong constitution, which enabled him to endure the effect of opium, and lived to the approach of old age. Tom Moore died like Scott, in a state of mental and bodily prostration. Chatterton and Hugh Miller committed suicide. Edward Everett died of a severe cold. Bryant was prostrated after making a speech, and never recovered.

Our poets have generally attained long life, as illustrated by the instances of Bryant, Charles Sprague and Halleck, to whom will yet be added Longfellow and Whittier.—N. Y. Cor. Troy (N. Y.) Times.

Care of Colts in Winter.

It is to be regretted that there are so many farmers who still cling to the old idea that colts should not be fed with grain while young, or until put to none but cornfed horses. Furthermore, it is quite a prevalent notion among farmers that if colts are exposed to cold storms and receive no grain usage generally, it tends to toughen them and they will make better horses than if given plenty of warm food and otherwise well cared for. But there could scarcely be a more fallacious theory than that such treatment could possibly promote their growth or general welfare. There are doubtless instances where the opposite course has been practiced, and young colts have been pampered and forced into an unhealthy growth for the purposes of gain; these are rare exceptions to the rule prevailing among the foremost breeders of thoroughbred animals.

We have often heard farmers assert that grain of any kind was too stimulating and heating for colts, and while this might be a point well taken in regard to corn meal, it does not apply to oats, which are, doubtless, the best food known for horses, whether old or young. Oats contain all the elements required to build up the system and make bones, muscles and flesh. Colts should be kept growing and in good spirits, and nothing that will impair the digestive organs or in any way injure the animal's health should be fed to them. Starving or scrimping, either in the quantity or quality of food, will never harden or toughen colts. On the contrary, give them plenty of the very best food in order to fully develop the system, increase the size, and lay a foundation for a strong, healthy constitution and a well-developed frame. Starving or scrimping, either in the quantity or quality of food, will never harden or toughen colts. On the contrary, give them plenty of the very best food in order to fully develop the system, increase the size, and lay a foundation for a strong, healthy constitution and a well-developed frame. The practice among those who raise fine horses is to give colts a small quantity of oats as soon as they are weaned. As long as the pasture is good, this extra feed may be omitted, but when they are brought in for the winter one or two quarts of grain per day are given and continued throughout the winter. Carrots and other nutritious roots may also be fed in moderate quantities with benefit. This food should be given in addition to a liberal supply of good hay, and all kinds of musty or dusty fodder should be carefully avoided. Colts should also be given a small quantity of salt occasionally, as it is conducive to health and general promoter of health. Pure water should also be supplied, and it is better to give it in small quantities and often, than at long intervals and then allow the animal to gorge himself in order to quench a severe thirst. Colts that are not old enough to be driven for exercise should be allowed to take a run in a yard for an hour or two every day if the weather will permit, or remain out altogether in warm climates; but a shelter should always be provided for them to sleep under at night and to protect them from cold storms. Generous treatment will always repay the breeders of stock, and with none better than horses, for colts well fed and cared for will come to maturity or a good size, and with sufficient strength to be put to hard work, a year sooner than when raised under a system of stinting in food and exposure to severe cold in winter.—*N. Of the 191,000,000 inhabitants of British India, their religious divisions are as given as follows: Hindoos, 139,543,820; Sikhs, 1,174,336; Mohammedans, 40,867,125; Buddhists and Jains, 2,829,851; Christians, 897,682, others, 5,417,304, and "religions not known," 522,227. The united military forces of the native States are estimated at 300,000 men. The gross revenues of the Chiefs amount to £16,000,000, and the pay £275,000 tribute money to the British Government. The British receipts and expenditures for India average about £50,000,000 a year. The Empress' Army numbers 200,000, of which 70,000 are English troops. To these number may be added 190,000 native police, who also perform frontier service.

MRS. JONES, how is your health this morning? Thank you, madam, much improved. I bought a bottle of Dr. Bailie Cough Syrup last night, and after the first dose my cough was checked. I slept well and have not coughed once this morning.

Breath Gymnastics.

The importance of breathing plentifully of fresh air as an essential of health, is generally admitted. Well-ventilated rooms, open-air exercise and excursions into the country are appreciated to some extent by all classes. But the art of breathing is very much overlooked. Being a process not depending on the will for its exercise, it is too much left to the mere call of Nature. It is, however, an act which can be influenced very materially by the will. Properly-trained singers are taught to attend very carefully to their breathing.

When brisk muscular exercise is taken, breathing is naturally active without any special effort. But when the body is at rest or engaged in occupation requiring a confined posture, and especially when the mind is absorbed in thought, the breathing naturally becomes diminished and the action of the lungs slow and feeble. The consequence is that the oxygenation of the blood is imperfectly carried on. Even in taking a constitutional walk the full benefit is not attained for want of thorough breathing.

As a remedy for this it has been suggested that there is room for what might be fitly termed breath gymnastics—to draw in long and full breaths, filling the lungs full at every inspiration, and emptying them as completely as possible at every expiration, and to acquire the habit of full breathing at all times. This mode of breathing has a direct effect in supplying the largest possible amount of oxygen to the blood and more thoroughly consuming the carbon, and so producing animal heat. It has also the very important effect of expanding the chest, and so contributing to the vigor of the system

The breath should be inhaled by the nostrils as well as by the mouth, where especially while out of doors and in cold weather. This has partly the effect of a respirator in so far as warming the air in its passage to the delicate air cells, and in also rendering one less liable to catch cold.

This full respiration is of so much importance that no proper substitute is to be found for it in shorter though more rapid breathing. In consequence a large portion of the air cells remains nearly stationary, the upper portion of the lungs only being engaged in receiving and discharging a small portion of air.

Profound thought, intense grief and other similar mental emotions always have a depressing effect on respiration. The blood unduly accumulates in the brain, and the circulation in both heart and lungs becomes diminished, unless, indeed, there be feverishness present. An occasional long breath or deep-drawn sigh is the instinctive effort in such a case, Nature making an effort to provide a remedy. This hint should be acted on and followed up. Where a muscular exercise is one in the open air even during inclement weather's an excellent antidote of a physical kind for a "rooted sorrow." And the same wise student, Procopius as they parted, and said in a instead of tying himself continuously to his desk, sigh at intervals a friend of the writer of this who studied and wrote while on his legs. Pacing his room, clip in hand with paper attached, he stopped as occasion required to pen a sentence or a paragraph.

Breathing is the first and last act of man, and is of the most vital necessity all through life. Persons with full, broad, deep chests rarely breathe freely and slowly, and large nostrils generally accompany large chests. Such persons rarely take cold, and when they do they throw it off easily. The opposite build of chest is more predisposed to lung diseases. The pallid complexion and consumptive blue veins show that oxygen is wanted, and that every means should be used to obtain it. Deep breathing also promotes perspiration, by increasing the circulation and the animal warmth. Waste is more rapidly repaired, and the skin as a depurating organ is quickened in its function to remove the used materials. Many forms of disease may be thus prevented, and more vigorous health enjoyed.—Saunders' Journal.

—Take Care of the Ashes.—Many fires occur through careless disposal of ashes. The ash house should be at a safe distance from any other buildings. A safe way is, to keep the ashes in an iron can or holder, until cool, and then throw them into the box or receptacle provided for them. Wood ashes are too valuable to waste, and coal ashes possess an excellent absorbent in the earth-closet, and are very good for making hard footpaths.—Am.

—Pop-Corn Balls.—Pop the corn, remove all imperfect kernels not open nicely, and put into a large pan or on a clean table—there should be a scant half bushel. Add a little salt to a pound of granulated sugar and boil until the mixture, when tried in cold water, is waxy; stir in five tablespoonfuls of fruit-acidic solution, of about the thickness of molasses—made by dissolving the gum in boiling water—and pour over the corn. With a spoon or stick stir until all of the kernels are coated with the mixture. When cool, flour the hands and press into balls. Flavor the sugar mixture with whatever you choose.

—Mince Pie.—One pound of finely-chopped, boiled beef—that from the neck is best; one-half pound of grated sour apple, a pound of raisins, stoned and cut fine, a pound of currents, one-fourth of a pound of suet, half the same of citron, both chopped. One teacup each of jelly, sugar and molasses, the juice and grated rind of a lemon, one grated nutmeg, a teaspoonful each of salt, ground cinnamon, mace and cloves; two quarts of cider boiled or not. Mix thoroughly, put in a porcelain kettle and set in the back of the stove. Let the mixture simmer for one hour, stirring often. Pack in a stone jar and keep in a cold place.

Keeping Farm Accounts.

Probably there is no class of men doing business, who neglect to the same extent, the keeping of accounts, as those engaging of the operations of each year. The merchant keeps his cash account, and also a book where such items are jotted down as he may think necessary to be put to hard work, a year sooner than when raised under a system of stinting in food and exposure to severe cold in winter.—*N. Truth and Soberness.

What is the best family medicine in the world to keep the whole body purified, the blood renewed, the liver regulated, perfect digestion and eliminate the whole system?

Truth and soberness compels us to answer, Hop Bitters, being pure, perfect and harmless. See "Truths" in another column.

The Domestic Monthly.

Our lady readers who have not seen a copy of this popular publication, cannot realize what a sensible, refined, and practical fashion and literary magazine it is. We deem it a necessity to every lady, in fact do not see how they can do without it. It stands at the head of fashion magazines, while its literary contents are of the highest standard. It is only [illegible] cents per year with a dollar pattern premium added. Specimen copy, fifteen cents. BRAKE & CO., 820 Broadway, New York, are the publishers.

Advanced Physicians.

Many of the more advanced physicians, having heard Dr. Eleese's Family Medicine prompt and sure, prescribe them regularly to their practice.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, JAN. 21, . . . 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Jan. 17, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

New York has discovered a trio of young heroes, under the leadership of a lad known as "Nan, the Newsboy." They have made it their business to save the lives of those who, willingly or unwillingly, have found themselves in the waters about our docks. Like Topsy, Nan seems to have "growed." He appears to have forsaken the community at an early age, as a full-blown hero, and to have constituted himself and his two companions a life-saving service. After the work of the day is over they devote their time to his humane and entirely self-imposed task. With rubber boots, cork belts, lifelines, and lanterns, they patrol the dangerous and unprotected portions of the wharves, guarding drunken sailors from tumbling over the low springpiece, or plunging into the water when too late to prevent a fall.

This homely devotion to the good of humanity has not been permitted to go unnoticed. The newspapers have taken the matter up, and it looks now as though the boys would have a substantial recognition of their services in the shape of funds with which to carry out "Nan's" pet idea—the establishment of a service in good and regular standing.

Captain Paul Boynton, the inventor of the life-saving armor suit, has taken a great fancy to Nan and his comrades, and gave them an invitation to dine with him at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. It must have been a harder thing for the brave young fellows to face the gorgeousness of the fashionable hotel, than to have leaped into the icy waters of the bay; but with oysters, soups, fish, entrées, roasts, game, and dessert, twenty-year old hunger got the better of shyness, as well as of the viands. "Now, lads, sit down anywhere and make yourselves at home," said their host. "Gentlemen," said Nan, "this here is Gilbert Long, and that's Edward Kelly," and then the destruction began. "Have a little light wine Nan?" "No it would raise me head; we're all temperance." As the dinner proceeded, vests were unbuttoned, and collars gave way under the strain. Nan told a story about a woman who was determined to jump off one of the piers. "I ketched her by the back hair just as she was throwing herself over the stringpiece. Then she tried to scratch me. 'I've lost all my money and all my things,' said she, 'and I don't want to live any longer.' I see she was as full as a tick, and says I, 'You've kept away from the water up to now, and I guess you can keep away awhile longer.'" "When I'm grabbled around the neck by a man in the water, I helps him over the ear, and if that don't make him let go, then I belt him in the mug. That always fetches him." With a man's heart in the right place the relative positions of subjects and predicates, and the somewhat shaky use of the English language in general, fall to the background as matters of no importance.

The cost of organizing the corps contemplated by Nan, together with the furnishing of three stations at different points along the river front, will be about $800, and the cost of keeping up the service about $2,000 a year. Already the open handed brokers of Wall Street have subscribed enough to ensure the success of the scheme. The boys have received little or no reward for their unselfish devotion. It is a well-known fact that a rescued person expresses little gratitude for his deliverance. Captain Boynton says that if you want a man to avoid you ever after, lend him $10 or save his life.

Since June last, Nan has saved fifteen lives; Long six; and Kelly, two, and as their labors are among those from whom no reward could be expected, the work is the result of a conscientious desire to serve the cause of humanity; and if a little romantic excitement come in as one cause of keeping up his service, no one will think the less of him or hold back his hearty plaudits for the good work done, or his best wishes and assistance for the future of Nan, the Newsboy's life saving corps.

New York policemen, with all their faults, have one strong point. They rigidly uphold the dignity and majesty of the law as embodied in themselves. A couple of these noble creatures are now up before the Police Commissioners, to whom it has been clearly shown, on the testimony of a score of witnesses that they nearly clubbed to death a man who ventured to remonstrate against his unexpected and causeless arrest. During their examination, one of the offending peelers admitted that he didn't know what they arrested the man for, and that he only clubbed him as a matter of form. On the same evening, and just before the exploit mentioned, the same worthy pair had collared an old man "on suspicion," and told him they would let him go if he would stand treat, which he accordingly did. It is rather more than possible that these two valuable cusses will be lost to the force hereafter, and that these over-vigilant guardians of the peace will be returned to private life, where they can club their fellow-men only on equal terms and at the risk of serving their country in the penitentiary.

The sugar agitation still continues lively hereabouts. The enemies of the refiners finding themselves beginning to lose ground in the public estimation, are making the most strenuous exertions to obtain credence for their stories of fraud and adulteration. Last Monday night there was a mass meeting at Cliekering Hall, which they had previously called, and at which their ringleader, "the man named Fuller," whom I mentioned in a recent letter on this subject, made a violent speech denouncing the refiners, and urging the same old charges, which have been repeatedly discredited. It was love's labor lost for the Cubans, however, for not only did the audience openly resent the absurd harangue, but Hon. David A. Wells, who was present, and who had been especially assued by Mr. Fuller, came forward and made a speech setting forth the real facts in the case, and refuting the slanders against himself and against the refiners, in such a way that the antagonists of the latter were placed in a worse shape than ever.

The Fifth Avenue Theatre, which has for years been the leading theatre in New York in the production of society dramas, has been ignominiously closed on account of dissensions in its management and lack of funds with which to pay its company and orchestra; and a receiver has been appointed to close out its affairs. The catastrophe occurred one evening during Jeo Jefferson's engagement. The eminent Rip Van Winkle was dressed for his part, and a good-sized audience was assembled in the house, when the actors and actresses unanimously struck for their back pay, and as they obstinately declined to take soft words and fair promises in lieu thereof, the impatient audience had to be told that there would be no performance, but that they could get their money back at the door. Thus closed in disgrace, for a time, at any rate, the career of one of the most brilliant and apparently successful places of amusement in the country. It remains to be seen how soon a manager will be found courageous enough to attempt to coax back its former prestige.

In the theatrical line there is nothing else particularly startling, unless it be the attatk which is just commencing on the so-called "sacred" concerts, which have recently so multiplied, especially at low resorts, as to make Sunday even in New York about the most disorderly and immoral time of the week. A movement to suppress the annoyance is now getting under way. In the way of other amusements there is the continuance of Madame Anderson's attempt to walk 2,700 quarter miles in the same number of quarter hours. She is now nearing the end of her task, and at this writing seems sure of success. She thought perhaps not as much as the $24,000 of gate-money which the O'Leary-Campana match attracted to the Hippodrome. She seems to be a versatile little woman, stopping her walk now and then to make a speech to her audience, or to sit down at a piano which she has near the track to sing and play for their delectation. At Gilmore's Garden, Captain Bogardus, of shotgun fame, has done some good shooting this week, breaking 6,000 glass balls with only thirteen misses. The shooting occupied two days, during the first of which he broke his 3,000 without a single miss. Bogardus and Dr. Carver are expected to shoot an exciting match here before long.

The Governor of Wisconsin, in his annual message, estimates that the tramps, by their contributions levied upon individuals and communities, cost the people of Wisconsin nearly as much as all their State taxes. While some men were at work in the woods near Flint a few days since felling trees, their curiosity was excited by the rattle of chains as the tree struck mother earth. Upon examining the tree a large iron trap with a heavy chain was found about thirty feet from the butt, and the chain running almost exactly through the center of the trunk, firmly imbedded in the solid wood. The tree, which is one of good size in proportion to its height, was sawed off on either side of the chain, and will be preserved as a relic.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and uselulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Chester, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

General News Summary.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—SECOND SESSION.

A LARGE number of petitions were presented in the Senate, on the 7th, many from women, asking that effect be given to the Anti-Polygamy law of 1862, and others protesting against the so-called "Edmunds' Law" bill, and against the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. Bills were introduced for the interchange of subsidiary coin and United States notes; to authorize the counting of outstanding legal tenders; to authorize local taxation of United States notes. Mr. Edmunds offered a resolution declaring that, in the judgment of the Senate, the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution have been legally ratified, and are as valid as the other parts of the Constitution; that it is the right and duty of Congress to enforce such amendments by appropriate legislation, and the duty of the Executive Department to faithfully and impartially execute such laws, and the duty of Congress to appropriate money to that end; and instructing the Judiciary Committee to report a bill for the protection of the rights of citizens and the punishment of infractions thereof. The resolution was laid on the table at the request of Mr. Edmunds, to be called up hereafter. In the House, bills were introduced—to include newspapers, periodicals and proof-sheets in matter of the third class; for the admission of Dakota as a State; extending the time for granting certain public lands, who have suffered by prairie fires; a resolution reciting the charges of gross misconduct and corruption against Judge Bradley, of the District of Columbia, Northern Illinois, and instructing the Judiciary Committee to investigate the charges; a judicial conduct, was adopted. The deaths of Messrs. Dorsey, Ferry, Chandler, Conger, of Michigan, were announced, and the House, in respect to their memory, adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 8th, Mr. Grover, rising to a personal explanation, denied the charges made against him relative to the misappropriation of the public funds of Oregon while thereof of that State. The business of the Senate was interrupted by a message from the House announcing the death of Representative Herbidge. A committee of three Senators was appointed to accompany the body of the deceased to Georgia, and the Senate then adjourned. In the House, official notice of the death of Representative Herbidge was made, and a committee of seven was appointed to accompany the remains to Georgia. The House then adjourned.

A LARGE number of petitions were presented in the Senate, on the 9th, many of them being in favor of the bill granting arrears of pensions. The Indian appropriation bill was reported back from committee with amendments. A resolution to accept an invitation from the House to attend the funeral of the late Representative Herbidge was adopted by the Senate. Mr. Hill introduced a bill to alter the boundaries of the State Mr. Hartley announced his withdrawal as a candidate for Senator. Mr. Edmunds offered a resolution declaring that, in the judgment of the Senate, the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution have been legally ratified, and are as valid as the other parts of the Constitution; that it is the right and duty of Congress to enforce such amendments by appropriate legislation, and the duty of the Executive Department to faithfully and impartially execute such laws, and the duty of Congress to appropriate money to that ends; and instructing the Judiciary Committee to report a bill for the protection of the rights of citizens and the punishment of infractions thereof. DOMESTIC.

IN Washington, on the 9th, Charles Thompson, principal Chief of the Cherokee Nation, and several delegates from that tribe, and also from the Creeks and Chickasaws, called on President Hayes. Chief Thompson and P. Porter, of the Creeks, made brief speeches, stating that their people were to a prosperous condition, and were favorable to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. In his reply the President said the points presented by the delegations were being considered by the Government, and that, so far as he was concerned, he would do all he could to have the views and wishes of the Indians carried out. Above all, he would say that the treaties with the Indians should be faithfully observed by the Government. Secty Schurz, Commissioner Hayt and Inspector Hammond were present during the interview.

A MAN named Clark Hubbard, his wife and two children, en route west from Sherman, Texas, were frozen to death near Echo Point, in that State, a few nights ago.

SPECIAL telegrams from Camden, N. J., giving an account of the hanging there, on the 10th, of Benjamin Hunter, for the murder of John St. Armstrong, report the execution to have been a fearfully-botched affair. The victim died a most horrible death. One account says: "Surrounded by men drinking whisky from flasks, and smoking the vilest tobacco, he was actually strangled to death by two Deputy-Sheriffs, who seized the rope (the weight having proved insufficient to suspend the body), and swayed the body back and forth as if taking delight in their work. The place was turned into a holiday picnic, and there was no solemnity about the scene."

DURING the night of the 9th, the Cheyennes imprisoned at Camp Robinson, Neb., revolted, shot down the guard and made their escape into the surrounding darkness. Troops immediately followed in pursuit, and of the fleeing savages thirty-five were recaptured, thirty killed and as many more more or less wounded. About thirty were missing on the evening of the 10th. One soldier was killed and four wounded.

THE Secretary of the Treasury, on the 11th, issued another call for bonds to the amount of $2,000,000—$1,000,000 coupon and $1,000,000 registered—interest to cease on the 11th of April next.

TWO INDIAN CHIEFS—White Owl and Quill-To-Tramp—were hanged at Pendleton, Ore., on the 10th. They were dressed in full Indian costume, and preserved throughout the skeleton of their race, both dying with the death chant on their lips.

JAMES MCMANUS, of Davenport, Iowa, while handling a revolver, supposed to be empty, on the morning of the 12th, shot and killed his sister Mary, sixteen years of age.

MRS. ANDERSON completed the task of walking 2,700 quarter-miles in 2,700 quarter-hours, at New York, on the evening of the 13th. She realized about $15,000 by the undertaking.

A SEVERE earthquake shock was felt at Jacksonville and other points in Florida, on the night of the 12th. I lasted about half a minute, and buildings were violently shaken, and doors thrown open.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Pennsylvania Legislature assembled at Harrisburg, on the 7th, and perfected its organization by the choice of Thomas B. Cochran as Clerk of the Senate, and H. M. Long (both Republicans), as Speaker of the House.

THE State Legislature of Minnesota was organized, on the 7th, by the election of the Republican caucus nominees for officers of the House. In the Senate the Republican caucus nominee for Secretary and his assistant were elected, but the Democrats and Greenbackers united and elected the other officers.

THE Nebraska Legislature was reconvened, on the 7th, by the election of C. H. Matthewson as Speaker of the House, and Sherwood Blair as Secretary of the Senate.

AT Washington, on the morning of the 8th, Hon. Julian Hartridge, Democratic Representative from the First Georgia District, died, of pneumonia.

THE Wisconsin Legislature met at noon, on the 8th. The organization of the Senate was effected by the election of Senator Price as President pro tem., and Charles E. Ross as Secretary. In the House, D. M. Bailey was elected Speaker, and John Eldred, Chief Clerk. The Republican caucus nominees for the minor offices in both houses were elected.

ON the 9th, the Legislature of Illinois perfected its organization. In the Senate, Mr. Hamilton was elected President pro tem., and J. H. Paddock, Secretary. In the House, Col. William A. James was elected Speaker, and W. B. Taylor, Clerk. The Republican caucus nominees for the minor offices, in both houses, were elected.

IN Joint Convention, on the 9th, the Connecticut Legislature elected the Republican State ticket voted for at the late election. In his inaugural message, Gov. Andrews favors allowing women property-holders to vote on questions of taxation, or property.

THE Legislature of Missouri was organized, on the 9th, by the election of the Democratic caucus nominees, the Republicans joining with the Democrats.

THE Legislature of Indiana was organized, on the 9th, by the election of D. D. Dale as Secretary of the Senate, and H. G. Cantourne, Speaker, and W. Dixon, Clerk, of the House.

ON the 10th, the Potter Committee, on motion of Mr. McMahon, adopted a resolution ordering an investigation of the "cipher telegrams," and requesting the House to grant an additional appropriation for expenses.

HON. GUSTAV SCHLEICHER, Representative in Congress from the Sixth Texas District, died at Washington, on the night of the 10th. His disease was originally malarial fever, which was followed by erysipelas and then paralysis. This makes the seventh death among Congressmen during the present Congress, and the fourth since the present session began.

THE Arkansas Legislature was fully organized, on the 10th. M. M. Dalton was elected President of the Senate, and K. B. Bearden, Speaker of the House.

THE Military Court of Inquiry in the case of Maj. M. A. Reno held its first session in Chicago, on the 10th. The investigation into the accusations of cowardice against Maj. Reno, in connection with the "Custer Massacre," was instituted at the urgent request of the accused.

FOREIGN.

ON the evening of the 7th, the King of Holland was married with great ceremony to the Princess Emma, of Waldeck-Pyrmont.

THE golden wedding of the Emperor and Empress of Germany occurs on the 11th of June. On the 8th, they gave notice that they did not desire personal gifts on that occasion, but they would be gratified if the money such gifts would cost be devoted to charitable purposes.

THERE is a lively agitation throughout Germany upon the tariff question. Bismarck having become an avowed protectionist.

THE Kharkoff Veterinary School and the Kieff University, in Russia, have been closed, in consequence of the riotous demonstrations of the students.

THE Consuit Iron Works Company, the largest makers of ship-plates in England, employing 6,000 hands, and owning nine collieries, has been forced to suspend operations, in consequence of the prevailing business depression.

ON the 9th, the Pope published an encyclical letter, calling upon all bishops to combat Socialism, Communism and Internationalism by vigorously preaching the principles of the Church.

DON ESPARTERO, Duke of Vittoria, the celebrated Spanish statesman, died at Madrid, on the 9th.

ANOTHER great snow-storm prevailed throughout Scotland, on the 9th and 10th, destroying telegraphic communication and seriously interrupting railroad travel. In Ireland it assumed the proportions of a hurricane and did great damage to shipping and buildings.

THE Sub-Committee of the French Chamber of Deputies on the acts of the Broglie-Fourtou Ministry, of the 16th of May last, have decided upon impeachment.

THE new French Cable Company proposes to lay two cables, one from Cape Breal to Cape Cod, and the other from Land's End to Nova Scotia, both by way of St. Pierre.

ACCORDING to Berlin telegrams of the 9th, the negotiations relative to the preventions of collisions at sea had resulted in the formulation of a code of regulations which had received the assent of a majority of the Powers interested, and which would shortly be incorporated into international law, by convention.

ACCORDING to Calcutta dispatches of the 12th, information had been received of the coronation of Lunidaer by Gen. Stewart. It was also stated that Yarcodchkan had been officially informed of the terms on which peace could be secured, and that they were neither hinder nor hurry.

THE library of the Birmingham and Midland Institute, at Brimmeham, Eng., containing 80,000 volumes, of which 4,000 related to Shakespeare, was burned, on the 11th.

A TREMENDOUS gale occurred on the European coast, on the 11th. Many small vessels were destroyed, and over seventy lives were lost.

CALCUTTA dispatches of the 13th say the troops composing the Peshawur and Kuram columns were in winter quarters.

GEN. ROBERT, the French Minister of War, has resigned. His successor is Gen. Wresley, a liberal, and a Deputy belonging to the Left Centre.

THE house-builders, ship-builders and foundrymen of Bangor, and 693 weavers in Carlisle, Eng., have struck against a proposed reduction of wages.

A CONSTANTINOPLE telegram of the 13th says the definitive treaty between Russia and Turkey had been agreed upon, and only awaited the signatures of the two Powers to go into execution.

PRINCE HENRY, brother of the King of the Netherlands, died, on the 13th.

A LONDON telegram of the 13th says that, a few days before, Ben Israeli, Prime Minister of the Bey of Tunis, had visited the French Consulate and tendered, on behalf of the Bey, a full apology for recent alleged insults to France.

ACCORDING to a Paris special of the 13th, Gen. Grant would not wait for the arrival of the United States steamer Richmond, but would sail for India on the French steamer leaving Marseilles, on the 23d.

THE TELLER INVESTIGATION AT NEW ORLEANS.

The United States Senate Teller Investigating Committee, met, in New Orleans, on the 7th, all the members being present. J. Ernest Breda, of Natchitoches, was sworn, and testified that he served during the war in the Louisiana Regiment; had been a Republican since 1871; had been a delegate-at-large and did not take part in the last campaign, having been driven away from the city on the 22d of October. After the appointment of a Republican meeting held on the 20th of September, whereupon the bushy started home on horseback; had gone about 100 yards, when at the corner of a street a body of armed men appeared in front; passing by, which it was to be attacked, and he (witness) fled to the right; his horse refused to do, and he was captured; and he (witness) and his party were placed within two hours the house and properly could be reported. Witness and others were taken to the woods until the 22d of October, and hearing that the Democrats were in numbers, with bloodhounds, they left for Shreveport on the 23d of October. Saw no arms in their hands; there was no intimidation among the Democrats; they left for Shreveport on account of fear. Saw no Democrats among the party; knew of no Democrats who were prevented from voting. Saw no arms in the hands of the Democrats. Was a member of the Returning Board; was present when the vote was counted; saw no intimidation; the vote was counted in a parish near adjoining the negroes to suppress the regular Democratic tickets.

On the 9th, William D. Robinson, of Texas, testified that he was a Democrat, but was a candidate on the Independent ticket at the last election; saw an outrages committed; saw a body of fifteen armed men at the polls on election day under Hardham, Deputy Sheriff; thinks intimidation has frightened the negroes so much they stayed away from the polls, and that of the negroes who voted they would have had a majority of 1,000.

J. R. Lacey, of Texas, stated that he was sent of the posse of Sheriff Register summoned to suppress the negroes, organized, was mounted, was assembling at Bows' place, for the purpose of attacking Register and party; heard that they assumed them; on the way they heard that the negroes had massed, and that firing had commenced between them and the advanced guard of two hours; order was then given to advance and fire; the firing was down in the direction of where the negroes were supposed to be massed; the negroes were in their quarters, and when one volley was fired they dispersed; two or three negroes were wounded; don't think any were killed.

Frank Watson (colored) testified that he lived eight miles from Watertown, and was told by Dick, a white friend that the place was getting too hot for him to live there, and advised him to go away, leaving left his partly-gathered crop to take care of itself. That one day there were fifty or sixty armed men from Coushatta and Watertown; knew Dick Wilson; was acquainted a negro boy's neck because he would not answer a question; was asked this; witness did for nine days in the woods and then were killed; knew also that 40 others were killed so far, has to return.

Other colored witnesses testified to a general intimidation of negroes in Caddo Parish, and that Kenny collected arms from the negro quarters.

GEN. ROBERT, the French Minister of War, has resigned. His successor is Gen. Wresley, a liberal, and a Deputy belonging to the Left Centre.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Roll called; full Board present.

Mr. Keat withdrew his motion in reference to the removal of the county seat to the head of South Arm.

The standing committee on the removal of the county seat reported through their chairman as follows:

Your committee appointed to investigate and submit terms and proposals to this Board with regard to the removal of the county seat, submit the following report: At a meeting of said committee held at Boyne Dec. 31st, 1878, the following proposals were received: George F. Beardsley will give three acres of land on the north side of Boyne river, east of the present village plat, on the south-east quarter of the north-west fractional quarter of section 35, in Township 33 North of Range six west. John Nicholls will give a suitable piece of land for county buildings, on the south half of the south west fractional quarter of section 35, Town 33 North, of Range six west, as follows: Joining surveyed lots located on the south side of Main street, as surveyed, and on the east side of the extension of Lake street, of the present village plat of Boyne village, which he promises to have platted in a square, surrounded by a street, with a street directly in front open to the lake, and in consideration of the site being established on section 35 in township 33 North of Range six West in said County and State, we have received subscription to the amount of $1,675 for the improvement of said grounds and the section of county buildings, and your committee respectfully recommended that the proposition of Mr. Nicholls be accepted, all of which is respectfully submitted.

EMORY K. ROBISON,
W. C. NILES,
J. E. DARRAH,
Committee

On motion of Mr Smith the report of the committee was accepted and adopted.

Mr. Robinson presented the following preamble and resolutions.

Whereas, It is deemed to be for the best interest of the people of the county of Charlevoix, that the county seat be removed to some point near the center of said county, therefore,

Resolved, That the county seat be removed from its present location in the village of Charlevoix to the North half of the South West fractional quarter of section 35 in Township number 33 North of Range number six West, in the county of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, and we hereby designate the North half of the South West fractional quarter of section 35 in Township number 33 North of Range number six West in the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan as the place to which it is proposed to remove the county seat, of said county.

Resolved, That the question of removing the county seat from its present location in the village of Charlevoix, to the North half of the South West fractional quarter of section 35 in Township number 33 North of Range number six West, in said county be submitted to a vote of the electors of said county at the next annual Township meeting, to be held in said county on Monday, the 7th day of April, A. D 1879. That Wilber F. Lougg, be and hereby is instructed by this Board to cause a notice to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel a newspaper published in said county for at least four successive weeks previous to the 6th day of April, A. D. 1879, and that he post notices in at least three public places in each Township in said county, at least thirty days previous to the 7th day of April, A. D. 1879, which notice shall set forth the place from which such proposed removal is to be made naming the place which has been designated by the Board of Supervisors, and the day when such proposed removal will be submitted to the electors of said county, in the several Townships thereof.

Ayes — Ackerson, Bailey, Darrah, Hicks, Niles, Robinson, Wooden—7.

Nays—Green, Keat, Smith, Wood, Ward, Weaver—6.

Lost.

Moved by Mr. Niles that each Supervisor be instructed to notify their respective Town Treasurers, to return the covers for Rolls to the Co. Treasurer, and the Co. Treasurer to return them to the parties of whom he purchased them. Carried.

On motion of Mr. Keat, the Board reconsidered the vote in reference to returning the covers of the Rolls.

Mr. Darrah moved to amend, that the covers which are the right size be returned, and the balance returned within twenty days.

Amendment accepted by Mr. Niles. Carried.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Manistee—ss. At a session of the Probate Court for said county, held at the Probate Office in the Village of Manistee, on the 19th day of November, A. D. 1878.

Present, C. B. Wright, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Michael Dunleavy, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Mrs. Peter Gallagher, praying for the appointment of an administrator of said estate.

Thereupon it is ordered, that Tuesday, the 18th day of March, 1879, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate Office in the village of St. James, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted. And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper circulated in said county for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

MONEY TO LOAN, on good real estate security. Inquire of A. R. Upright, Charlevoix, Mich. 16-1yr

PROSPECTS for the growth of Charlevoix the coming summer are very promising. Several building schemes are being worked up which have good prospects of success, and which will constitute a giant stride in the development of Charlevoix

THE Rev. Wm. Carleton Irish, a traveling Missionary for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, (Mormon,) held forth at the school house on Thursday and Friday evening of last week. He is a preacher of considerable ability, and of excessive zeal in more directions than one. His audiences were good, and he was listened to with respectful attention. He is an unmarried man, is opposed to polygamy, but a very moderate amount of coaxing would induce him to enter a condition of monogamy.

LEADING farmers of the northern portion of Antrim county, who live at a distance of twelve and fourteen miles from Charlevoix, say that this place is absorbing almost the entire trade of that section. The reasons for this are obvious. It is the most natural outlet for all the surplus products of that comparatively well developed section. The same may be said of all the farming country which is tributary to Charlevoix. Our harbor, and our location upon the main thoroughfare of navigation, furnish our merchants excellent facilities for cheap transit from Chicago, Milwaukee and lower lake markets, and, on the other hand makes this the most natural point of transfer for all the surplus products of the country. As these products increase in quantity, facilities for handling them must be increased accordingly, and will be. Where farmers can dispose of their products to the best advantage, and buy goods the cheapest, there will they establish their market, both for sale and purchase. All things point to Charlevoix as the principal base of distribution for this region, as plainly as the dial indicates the time of day.

RAILROAD RUMORS.

Talk About Extending the Lake Shore Road Up This Way!

It is rumored that an effort will soon be made to extend the Lake Shore Railroad from its present terminus northward to Little Traverse. In fact the subject is being talked up enthusiastically down in Muskegon county, from what we learned the other day from a gentleman from Grand Rapids. It is well known that the shipping interests all along the shore are enormous. It would seem that Manistee alone would keep a railroad pretty busy transporting lumber from her large mills, especially in winter. This would, of course, make a long line of road, and a very pleasant thoroughfare. Now then, we should like to hear what the people of Manistee, Traverse, City, Elk Rapids, Charlevoix, Petoskey and other towns on the route have to say. Speak out—Little Traverse Republican.

We have always considered the extension of the Lake Shore Railroad as only a matter of a few years. The many thriving towns along the shore north of its present terminus, with their rapidly increasing commerce, must inevitably call that road this way. With its splendid harbor and inland navigation, Charlevoix would be the most advantageous terminus.

ESCAPED AND CAPTURED.—Henry Moore, who was in durance vile at Cheboygan, for "irregular conduct" was released on a party of his friends one night last week, and left for parts unknown. He was well advertised, however, and was recaptured at Clam Lake and returned to his imprisonment at Cheboygan.

THE Beers property, in this village, which has been so long in probate, will soon be cut up into suitable business lots and disposed of to the highest bidder. Several of our business men are watching this property with a jealous eye, and it will no doubt soon after its sale be covered with business establishments. The location is one of the best in the village.

TANCTON TRAVEL.—Mr. Bartholomew, while outside, will visit the President of the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad Company, and endeavor to effect an arrangement whereby passengers on their road can be ticketed through to Charlevoix via Boyne Falls and Pine Lake. If the Railroad Company concluded to enter into the project, a daily stage will be placed on the route between Boyne Falls and Boyne, and by this means a through line of travel established.

A BIG ENTERPRISE.—The Traverse City papers are full of news regarding another scheme of that wide awake firm, Hannah, Lay & Co., of Traverse City This firm proposes, in a word to bring their undoubted resources and great energy into the work of making Traverse City a leading Northern Michigan resort. They have leased the Campbell House for a term of five years, and will, in the spring erect a number of cottages near that house, for the accommodation of health and pleasure seekers. They are overhauling their large steamer City of Traverse, and will make her in all respects second to none that floats Lake Michigan. She will make weekly trips between Traverse City and Chicago, and after July 1st, will make weekly excursions to Mackinaw remaining there one day, affording tourists an opportunity to "do" the island in an inexpensive sort of a manner.

We have already spoken in these columns of the new steamer being built by Hannah, Lay & Co., for the Traverse City and Petoskey route. This steamer together with their other two, will afford a means of travel at once convenient and inexpensive. Of course it will be successful.

THE River and Harbor bill is nearly completed. The committee are working at it daily. The amount is between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000. The amount asked for by the Chief of Engineers for Charlevoix Harbor is $30,000.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A resident of Washington, Ky., took a vow that if ever he got drunk again he would whip himself all the way home from the tavern. He got drunk, and fulfilled his vow with such vigor that he could not stir out of bed for two weeks.

—Three tourists undertook to walk behind Niagara Falls a few days ago. The danger is great in winter, owing to the ice. One of the trio, in picking his way over the slippery path, ran against a huge icicle, which broke off and fell on him. He was badly cut, and has since been insane, but whether from a blow on the head or from fright is not settled.

—Miss Annie L. Elliott, a young lady of Marlboro, Mass., having died very suddenly recently, three of the resident physicians held a post mortem examination on her body, and found a large piece of lemon peel lodged in the esophagus. A number of large pieces of the same substance were found in the stomach, having been swallowed at different times during the week, and not been digested. The nervous prostration and exhaustion caused by these substances brought about her death.

—The following painful story is reported from the Village of St. Antoine de Tilly, in Canada. A middle-aged bachelor of the place, named Maxime La Borte, who lived alone and led an exemplary life, not having been seen about for some days, the neighbors broke in the door of his house, a terrible spectacle meeting their gaze. La Borte had been living having evidently left him several days before. The flesh of his face and other portions of his body had been almost entirely gnawed off by the rats, which had been confined in the house, and found no other means of appeasing their hunger.

—"The Finger of God" is the heading of a local item in the Nouveau Monde, of Montreal. Gabriel Cloutier, a pilot, addicted to indulging to excess, for intemperance and erring conduct, his two grown-up daughters. The girls, however, chastised him and his mother, and one of them severely bit the finger of his right hand. Next day he took out a warrant for them, but when he and the policeman arrived at the factory where the girls work, it was found that the biting one had just had the third finger of her right hand taken off by a machine. "The policeman was dismissed, for the old man was perverted, in the curious coincidence, that the finger of God had been said in punishment upon the principal offender."

—At Wilmington, N. C., the other day, while two ladies were engaged in making their toilet, with a large cat sitting at their feet, the animal suddenly, without warning, seized one of the legs of one of the ladies, and tore the flesh with its teeth and claws. Before the younger lady, her daughter, could come to her assistance, the wounds inflicted by the cat were many and painful. The young lady took hold of the little enraged beast and pulled it quickly away. The cat, infuriated to tigerish anger, then sprang at her, its tail swollen as large as a human arm, and scratched her, beside tearing her dress. A neighboring gentleman was appealed to for help, and, by the aid of the young lady's right grip on the cat's neck and a dumb-bell in the hands of the gentleman, the furious creature was killed.

—A story of a wonderful memory comes from Sydney, Australia. A prisoner set up in his defence an alibi, claiming that at the time of the robbery he was at home listening to the recital of a novel, "The Old Baron," by a man named Lane, who had committed it with other works, to memory. Lane's recitation, he said, took two hours and a half. The Attorney-General holding this to be incredible, Lane began: "In the time of King Henry, when the good Duke Humphrey returned from the wars in the Holy Land, where he had been sojourning for a number of years, there lived ——." After the witness had recited several pages the Attorney-General told him to stop, as he was satisfied. But the defense insisted that as the veracity of the witness had been questioned he should be allowed to go on. Finally a compromise was effected, Lane gave a chapter from the middle of the story and its conclusion, and the accused was found not guilty.

Why New Yorkers Wear Out Early.

Several of our leading doctors give it as their opinion that no man who takes his own life is in his right mind. It is also agreed that the style of living in New York and the style of doing business predispose a man to that morbid condition that induces him to take his life. The rush, the drive and excitement are almost continuous. Men who are good for anything have their hands full and their heads full. The brain is like a hot-box on a railroad train—only men hold up on the train, and they don't on the street. There's hardly a prominent man doing business in the Stock Exchange who has not work enough on hand for half a dozen men. As an illustration: The President of one of our leading banks has been under the doctor's care for over a year. He comes down to the bank every morning, and remains till five p. m. Beside the luminous business of his own institution, at eleven o'clock he goes down to Wall street, where he is a silent partner in a stock house. At one he is back again at the bank. His private office is crowded with prominent business men of New York. He has at least six institutions in which he is a Manager, a Director or President. These institutions represent every variety of investment. Beside this, he is at the head of an immense denomination, financially, and goes, last year, $50,000 to help the educational interests of his church out of a tight place. The different societies he represents keep him without a moment's leisure through the day, and his evenings are all consumed in business. I heard him say last week that he never slept after three o'clock in the morning. How such a man lives with such a pressure upon him is marvelous. He, of course, won't live out half his days. He's a specimen of New York business life. Our city is full of premature old men—older at thirty than their fathers are at sixty; preauturely gray, prematurely bald, limping around with canes, with their underpinning knocked out; unable to relish their food unless it is covered with the most pungent spices, or washed down with a deluge of liquor. One of the most eminent physicians said the other day: "Nine-tenths of our citizens who go to the insane asylum go there for want of sleep and want of nutritious food." Considering the style of our living and of our business, it's not at all a marvel that we have so many suicides.—N. Y. Cor. Boston Journal.

The Other Side of the "Intelligent Compositor" Question.

NEXT to the "intelligent compositor," the proofreader is the best-abused man in a newspaper establishment. Indeed, some philosophers have thought that the latter is entitled to the first rank. "We distinctly wrote," remarks the editor of the Blueville Bugle, "'Brother Bellver of Calvary Church, and only the fiendish ingenuity of the intelligent compositor could have twisted it into 'Bloody Bull-dozer of Calvary Church;' we accordingly regret, etc., etc." "In our editorial last week on the Ann Arbor University," explains the Ragopolis True Banner, "the intention was to allude to the 'internal dissensions' and not to the 'infernal dissections,' as the proofreader imagined." "I want you to understand," writes an awfully mad correspondent of the Badgertown Argus, "that I quoted the beautiful Sanscrit line, 'Ruet oggerd ei,' and not 'Root hog or die,' as your paper printed it. Why don't you hire some one who can read proof?" And thus it goes, without anyone giving very much thought to the horrible aggregation of pensbroke blunders and the mass of printers' copy. Writing of every conceivable design, from the neat copy of the first manuscript to the hieroglyphic scrawl of the old stager in journalism, all dumped on the unfortunate shoulders of the "comp." or proofreader. And yet mistakes in a good newspaper are very rare. Still a man has never been known to come to a newspaper office and say: "That letter of mine was abominably printed, not a mistake in the whole column;" but it is quite a common thing to have a man with red face and fiery eye, shout "Heavens and earth, what kind of a paper do you print, anyhow. I wrote 'to' and it came out 'the' this morning," and then he mops his heated brow in agony. Column and column of correct matter are forgotten, and the one mistake stands out in gigantic proportions. The Free Press has a compositor who frequently matters his thoughts aloud as he works at the case. Last week a peculiarly detestable piece of "copy" fell to his share, and, after he had settled in his own mind which was the top and which the bottom of the article, we must have lived another life before, and that this life must be perdition, 1,505 tramps, while during the corresponding months of 1877 it lodged 5,191. Outside of its office in thus suppressing the tramp directly, the yard has given employment to many honest workers among the poor and relieved them and their families from want. A few sentences from the Mayor's report will show how well the scheme has been carried out:

"The inauguration of labor has almost wholly kept away the thoroughly vagrant, dead-beat class, who used to peregrinate the city, begging from house to house. There is an immunity from these pests which the city has not before enjoyed for many years. On the opening of the yard I suppressed in a notice to the public that the citizens refrain from their indiscriminate almsgiving to the vagrant class, and send them to my office, with one of my cards or a note, indicating that the bearer desired a meal, when on the performance of two hours' labor he should receive it. This was done, I think, quite generally, and of those who were thus put in the ways of obtaining a meal not one in ten came. They preferred to go hungry rather than labor. Only fifty-seven have been furnished with meals, and most of these came in May and June. Contrast this with the fact that within three years 1,995 persons were fed, a meal to each, at the Dexter Asylum during the winter months."

The tramps who were driven away, some one will say, went to other cities or into the country and only transferred a nuisance without eradicating it. But suppose that every man in the city and country who is confronted by a starved beggar could say to him, "Go to such and such a place and you will find work;" how long would it be before the benefits enjoyed by Providence would be shared by almost every town and city in the land, and the tramp become a curiosity?—N. Y. Evening Post.

Fashion Notes.

Black satin opera cloaks are now fashionable.

Buttons for suits are of wood with small paintings on them. Each button has a different design on it.

The lucky horseshoe has become a wedding present; in wedding invitations the cards admitting guests to the church are made in the shape of a horseshoe.

Delicate shades of pale pink and light green come in the gauzes which are used for evening dresses, and are much favored for dinner dresses for young ladies.

Alsatian bows for the hair or bonnet are now made of bias velvet or other materials, instead of ribbon; the edges are rolled, and a thin wire is sometimes inserted to give stiffness.

Square-cut waists can be low and trimmed with standing ruches of lace, somewhat in the Marie de Medicis shape, are used for young girls' dresses; nearly all are low neck with short sleeves.

Silvered flowers interspersed with colored bows are worn on white dresses. Narrow ribbons with silver embroidered among the brightest flowers are also used in many-looped bows on the sides of thin dresses.

Flowers are worn in the shape of "cache-peignes," or else a band of pearls or of gilt encircles the head just in front of the chignon, and small bunches of flowers are worn at the side and at the top of the narrow catogan braids or curls.

For winter hat trimmings the cachemire ribbons with gold thread embroidered in them are more used than almost any other ribbons. "Mutlicolore" gauze, called "mosaique," is also employed, and ribbons and gauzes with Scotch plaids are popular.

The newest walking-boots for ladies are made of "shagreen," it is the

The Woodyard Treatment of Tramps.

The success of the authorities of Providence, in Rhode Island, in overcoming the tramp nuisance by charitable suppression is brought to our attention again by the annual report of Mayor Doyle of that city, who tells the story and gives the results of the establishment of the city woodyard, which has rapidly expanded to large dimensions, now giving employment in sawing wood to about eighty persons at fifty cents a day. Since last May the woodyard was first established, the city has had to lodge at the station-houses only 1,505 tramps, while during the corresponding months of 1877 it lodged 5,191. Outside of its office in thus suppressing the tramp directly, the yard has given employment to many honest workers among the poor and relieved them and their families from want. Our Young Readers.

"HOLD FAST ALL I GIVE YOU."

We were all in our cozy parlor,
Out a doll-many family,
And the five little folks were playing
Right merry as ever they:
I think it was "hide-the-thimble,"
Though to me it was new;
But they said, over and over—
"Hold fast all I give you."

It sounded to me like the twitter
Of a nest full of birds,
Who make a continuous clatter
Under the sound of soft words.
And though I appealed to be writing,
I watched it all through,
Each one taking turn with his whisper—
"Hold fast all I give you!"

They were quiet as mice in a cupboard—
No eager, noisy play;
First the little one, then another,
Found the small fingie word;
Fairies danced, and Santa Claus
They were telling from view,
As to each one the order was given—
"Hold fast all I give you!"

Since then, when I'm teaching the children,
If a task that I set them
Seems dull, at the lesson before them
Is inclined to frown,
And I have a trouble to make things
Look rosy to them,
I say to the little ones simply—
"Hold fast all I give you!"

Then I sing them how trying will help them,
To find the right way,
And the spirit to make work so easy
And pleasant as play.
They smile in their sunlight; for al lessons
They need but a clew—
Be they know what I mean, when I tell them—
Hold fast all I give you.

HOME-MADE DOLLS' HOUSE.

AS MANY young readers are not in a position to expend any very large amount for toys, the following suggestions, which are gathered from the Philadelphia Times, may be of service, and help to make the long winter evenings pass pleasantly:

A large packing case, divided into four compartments by two shelves placed crossways inside, makes an excellent dolls' house. Any carpenter would fix these shelves and put on a door in front at a very small charge. The four compartments make a dining-room, drawing-room, kitchen and bedroom. The ceilings should be covered with white glazed calico, pasted on; this makes a good imitation of whitewash. Pale blue calico pasted on the kitchen walls answers for the usual "distempering" of a real kitchen; this is less trouble than paint, painting or applying real whitewash, and looks quite as well. The calico must be strained as tightly as possible. The walls of the other rooms should be covered with paper. Carpets can be made out of pieces of velvet, or, better still, worked on canvas in a small pattern suitable to the room. This is a capital piece of easy work for a little girl. One grown person working in doll's house is a toy is that, like a doll. It induces children to practice needle-work. Real carpet is too thick for the doll's rooms, and the same remark will apply to oilcloth. Small pictures, cut out of papers or taken off bonbons, look well on the walls if surrounded by a narrow strip of gilt paper to imitate a frame.

Much of the furniture can be made at home. Beds are easily manufactured. Take an old note-paper or pencil-box, and place the lid upright against one end, the box being turned bottom upward. This forms a bed, with a back and a head. Stand this on one end, put a row of bean pins at the back inside, for the dolls to hang their dresses on, and close the entrance by a curtain of some soft material. (crimson llama or merino does well.)

The curtain should be made to draw to and fro; this is easily managed by running a wire through a row of loops at the back of the curtain, and then fixing it across the door. If made in a soft material (silk is too harsh), it will draw easily.

Tables and chairs can be made in cardboard, but they are hardly durable enough to be suitable for the doll's house. If the family contains a brother who has any taste for carpentry, he had better be applied to. Tables and chairs are easily made, even by amateur carpenters. If done neatly, it will be sufficient to paint the legs and back to imitate whatever wood is desired—varnishing is a sticky and smelly operation, and hardly one to be recommended to young folks who have any regard for their own frocks or their parents' carpets.

Extremely pretty chairs can be made by covering the wood with strong gum, and then laying cut straw regularly side by side upon it till the chair is covered. Sofas without arm can be made out of an empty hook-and-eye box; turn the box bottom upward; to form the seat, sew a piece of card against one side to form the back, and cover the back and seat first with a thin layer of wadding, then with silk, velvet or chintz.

A doll's house, such as described, is a toy in which all the children can take an interest, even the boys being useful in making it. Where such a toy is known to exist, friends and relatives who wish to make presents to the little ones generally let their gifts take the shape of some addition to the doll's house, which often grows surprisingly rich in the course of years. Glass and crockery, which cannot be made at home like the furniture, are frequently supplied in this manner. I omitted to mention a wash-stand among the bedroom furniture; a table does well for this, the top covered with a thin white oilcloth or marble paper. A toilet table should be covered with pink calico and draped white muslin, to match the bed.

Ingenious children will invent many other additions to the furniture. Of course it may be said that toy furniture is to be bought so cheaply that it is hardly worth the trouble of manufacturing at home; but the object of this paper is rather to find occupation for restless little fingers than to give lustructions how to make articles which shall combine the appearance of a furniture at any first-class toy shop. Doubtless prettier tables and chairs can be bought, but the hand-made ones gives amusement for many a wet afternoon, and their manufacture fills up many an idle hour.

How the Alps Were Formed.

Prof. Judd, of the Royal School of Mines, London, gave recently an interesting explanation of the formation of the Swiss Alps. The results of geological observations lead him to say that four stages can be recognized in the history of these Alps. First, the existence of a line of weakness in the earth's crust nearly coincident with the line of the present mountains. This is evidenced by the fact that along this line of weakness there were volcanic outbursts, the results of which can still be traced. Secondly, there followed along this line of weakness a depression, and in this huge "trough" of miles in extent there were accumulated sands, limestones and clays by various forms of water agencies, and by animals living in the waters. Thirdly, there followed a lateral compression of these soft and loose materials. There is evidence that the accumulation was of from six to seven miles in thickness, and the entire weight of the superincumbent material on the lower strata would have a share in effecting consolidation. But they not infrequently burn by spontaneous heat led to crystallization from fusion. There was, too, the crushing in from the sides of the trough. This is well illustrated in the Val de Tate Sir H. de la Beche, where lateral pressure was employed on layers of different colored chalk, and a veritable marble resulted, with splitting of parts of the accumulated mass. Fourthly, there followed the great earthquakes, all this into its present form, which was the work of rains and frosts. Some of the existing peaks, even 3,000 feet high, were completely entirely of the disintegrated material resulting from the action of the water, either as ice in glaciers or as rain and streams. The Matterhorn is cited as being one of these peaks, and the consequent curdling of the milk that is mixed with it by the repeated stirrings in the cream-jar. It may also occur from the use of impure salt, any particle of lime or free soda in the salt forming a soap by combination with the butter, and causing a white speck wherever the particle of alkali may have been. The latter cause may be prevented by the use of pure salt only, and there are several brands both of native and imported knowledge of facts had been presented them.

A New Flower.

The Italian Fanfulla records the discovery of a new gigantic flower, which is of such an amazing splendor as well as size that the Victoria Regia and the Rafflesia Arnoldi appear mere dwarfs by its side. The fortunate finder of this remarkable plant is the traveling traveler and naturalist, Odoardo Beccari, who has chiefly earned his fame by his extensive researches in the East Indian Archipelago. This hitherto unknown flower unfolds its mighty chalice of scarlet in the forests of Sumatra. The discoverer attributes it to the family of Amorphophallus, and has given it the specific name of Titanum. The diameter of the flower, when full blown, averages thirty-three inches. A peculiar misfortune has happened to the fronds of the "Titan" which Signor Beccari has dispatched to Europe. Six chests of bulb root arrived at Genoa on board a French steamer, addressed to the Marquis Coral-Salvioli, of Florence, who is a famous horticulturist, and who had prepared special culture houses for the plant. The customs officers of Genoa, however, out of terror of the dreaded phylloxera, have not only prohibited from admitting any living plants into this port. The rule prevails at present throughout the Italian Kingdom, lest the terrible little foe of the vineyards should be loosing himself in the immigrant plants, and the harmless bulbs of the "Titan" were rescinded in obedience to the strict letter of the law. Notwithstanding this law, the Fanfulla declares that vine-stalks from Bordeaux are being constantly landed in Genoa. The importer declares that his bundles are wanted for walking-sticks and umbrella-handles, and under this alias they escape the scrutiny of the customs officers, who never think that the "vine-lonse" may be secreting himself in the innocent-looking bundles. What has become of Signor Beccari's important cargo the Italian journal does not yet know.—London Globe.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—This is about the time for peddlers of new and marvelous kinds of fruits at fabulous prices. Those who have been only bit a few times can try again until they are satisfied.—Exchange.

—Fattening beef animals pays; but trying to fatten inferior animals is a waste of energy, time and labor. The animals should be selected with the special reference to the rapidity with which they will fatten; to the quality of the beef; fineness of bone; compactness of body, and small amount of offal which the carcase will yield.—American Agriculturist.

—Don't buy any patent "drinking fountains" for your fowls. I bought two and invented one, and I would sell the whole lot for one good three-cent postage stamp. Common wooden buckets are the best things for fowls to drink from that I can find; they are high enough to keep the hens from scratching dirt and litter in, and yet not too high for the fowl's convenience, and, beside, they are easily kept clean. An old broom and some hot water will make them as "clean as a whistle" in a few minutes.—Cor. Prairie Farmer.

—A contemporary says: "There is no reason why farming may not be made to pay much oftener than it does. Very few have learned to regard it as a business. It is a sort of chance work all round. Most men look on it as a sort of real estate transaction. They hope one day to sell out at a big figure, hence are afraid to improve, and run farms with a view to agricultural operations, for fear that whoever buys the land will not care for these little things. We have often heard some improving farmer ridiculed for his expenditures by some knowing ones, who were very fond of telling us that they had no idea of weakness there were volcanic outbursts, the results of which can still be traced. Secondly, there followed along this line of weakness a depression, and in this huge "trough" of miles in extent there were accumulated sands, limestones and clays by various forms of water agencies, and by animals living in the waters. Winter Butter.

The most serious difficulties of the dairy begin with the cold weather. In the winter season cows have usually passed their period of freshness for several months, the food is dry, and the temperature is very low; all these circumstances tend to change the condition of the milk and cream, and affect the character of the butter, so that with the advent of winter the complaints of trouble with churning become constant, and the dairy people become disgusted and despairing. The latter refuses to come in many cases, and after many hours of patient churning there is a foamy mass of sour cream without any sign of butter in it. Or the butter, after hours of churning, comes in specific grains of sand, without any coherency, and white, and of disagreeable flavor. The least disagreeable result is the appearance of white curdy specks, which disfigure the butter and render it unsuitable factory alike to the exacting customer and the ambitious producer.

The happy dairyman is he who has all his plans laid for winter quarters. His cows are fresh; he has a stock of beets, mangels or carrots on hand; his hay is green and odorous, having been cut in June, and cured while it was yet young, with all its juices sweet and abundant; his house is warm; his yards are well sheltered; his churn is warmed to a summer temperature, and his product is of even quality, and comes from the chief's pail fetching or disappointment. He enjoys the knowledge that his butter is selling at double the rates of the summer markets, and he is never disturbed by the souring of his milk or the softness or early spoiling of his product. It is not the winter dairyman who complains of the difficulties which have been referred to, because by his method of business they cannot possibly occur. But for many of those who are not so fortunate, and who are compelled by circumstances to make butter in the winter season, there is hope and comfort in the knowledge that by good management their troubles may be either prevented or greatly eased. In some cases it will be impossible to remove or prevent the difficulties met with, as, for instance, when there is one cow only, and she is either constitutionally a poor butter cow, or is in such a condition that good butter cannot be expected from her.

The most frequent difficulty experienced at this season is the impossibility of procuring butter after long-continued churning. This may be caused by the condition of the cow, constitutionally or otherwise. When it is constitutional sheer is no remedy, obviously; otherwise, the cow may have been milking for a long-continued period, and the quality of the milk may have become changed. In all cases it will be found that the mixture of the milk of a fresh cow with the other milk will remove the difficulty; so that where several cows are kept, it should be so arranged that some of the cows should come in early in the winter. This trouble may also be caused by keeping the milk too long before churning, or by churning the cream at too low a temperature. In the former case, the milk may have undergone the first process of decomposition, which is the conversion of alcohol from the fermentation of milk sugar, and this forms an emulsion with the fat-globules, which foams in the churn, and from which butter never can be made. In the latter case the fat-globules are too solid and hard to adhere together, and they either do not gather into butter or they form a loose sand or gravel-like mass, which is difficult to work together. Over-churning is another difficulty are to prevent decomposition of the milk by scalding it before it is set for cream. The scalding of new milk a teaspoonful of carbonate of soda for every four gallons, and to stir a teaspoonful of salt into the cream for each gallon as it may be added to the store in the cream-jar; and for the latter difficulty, to add warm water to the cream, or otherwise to bring it up to a temperature of 70 deg. at the churning.

The prevalent white color of winter butter may be changed into a fine summer color by the addition of a harmless and agreeable coloring matter instead of depriving it of its annatto. Some butter-coloring is made and sold ready for use by dealers in dairy supplies, and the directions are given by the dealers for their use. A simple and excellent coloring may be made by dissolving a piece of annatto paste, to be procured at drug-stores as large as a pea, for four gallons of cream, in a teacupful of hot water. The solution is pour it into the churn with the cream, and will give a rich yellow color to the butter without any streakiness or mottling. The much color will give a reddish and unnatural appearance, which will be prejudicial to the character of the butter, because the addition will be too apparent. Coloring matter does not change the character of the color, but the overdoing of it that is objectionable to the intelligent purchaser.

The white curly specks are the most troublesome to deal with. These may occur from a natural defect of the cow, and if so, they cannot be prevented. They may also result from the too long keeping of the cream, and the consequent souring of the milk that is mixed with it by the repeated stirrings in the cream-jar. It may also occur from the use of impure salt, any particle of lime or free soda in the salt forming a soap by combination with the butter, and causing a white speck wherever the particle of alkali may have been. The latter cause may be prevented by the use of pure salt only, and there are several brands both of native and imported knowledge of facts had been presented them.

A New Flower.

The Italian Fanfulla records the discovery of a new gigantic flower, which is of such an amazing splendor as well as size that the Victoria Regia and the Rafflesia Arnoldi appear mere dwarfs by its side. The fortunate finder of this remarkable plant is the traveling traveler and naturalist, Odoardo Beccari, who has chiefly earned his fame by his extensive researches in the East Indian Archipelago. This hitherto unknown flower unfolds its mighty chalice of scarlet in the forests of Sumatra. The discoverer attributes it to the family of Amorphophallus, and has given it the specific name of Titanum. The diameter of the flower, when full blown, averages thirty-three inches. A peculiar misfortune has happened to the fronds of the "Titan" which Signor Beccari has dispatched to Europe. Six chests of bulb root arrived at Genoa on board a French steamer, addressed to the Marquis Coral-Salvioli, of Florence, who is a famous horticulturist, and who had prepared special culture houses for the plant. The customs officers of Genoa, however, out of terror of the dreaded phylloxera, have not only prohibited from admitting any living plants into this port. The rule prevails at present throughout the Italian Kingdom, lest the terrible little foe of the vineyards should be loosing himself in the immigrant plants, and the harmless bulbs of the "Titan" were rescinded in obedience to the strict letter of the law. Notwithstanding this law, the Fanfulla declares that vine-stalks from Bordeaux are being constantly landed in Genoa. The importer declares that his bundles are wanted for walking-sticks and umbrella-handles, and under this alias they escape the scrutiny of the customs officers, who never think that the "vine-louse" may be secreting himself in the innocent-looking bundles. What has become of Signor Beccari's important cargo the Italian journal does not yet know.—London Globe.

How to Cure Frozen Feet.

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Journal:

About twenty years ago, when Browning & Sloan kept drug-store on the north side of West Washington street, I happened in as Dr. Newcomer was ordering a fly-blister for the feet of a female patient which had been badly frozen. Some mention of the philosophy of the prescription, to which he replied that the cause of the itching and other disagreeable pains of frozen feet was the dead cuticle, which obstructed healthy action of the parts. The blister removed that, and the new cuticle would allow proper perspiration, and itching would cease. The philosophy struck me as sound, but the fly-blister was objectionable, both as a matter of convenience and expense. Having two feet that had been itching of winters for twenty years, I resolved to try the experiment of removing the cuticle by a cheaper and more convenient method. I got some lumps of fresh lime and made a bath full of strong white-wash mixture, as warm as I could comfortably bear my feet in. At night, just as they began their nocturnal itching, I soused them in the tub of hot whitewash. The relief was instantaneous. It felt really comfortable. At the end of thirty minutes I took them out, all shriveled up, but free from pain. Then began a brisk rubbing, and there came off great rolls of dead cuticle; then I anointed my feet with a little mutton-tallow, put on some cotton socks to preserve the lard from the bed-clothes, and slept well. I repeated the application two or three times, and have never suffered from frozen feet since longer than it would take to get the whitewash ready on each recurrence of frost-bite. As I do not own the patent, Dr. Newcomer and all other doctors are at liberty to use the prescription. It is cheaper than Spanish flies and a great deal better.

S. PERRIGO.

A Sad Case.

The following heartrending tale was brought home my notice the other day: A strong man, in the prime of life, with a young wife and two merry, bright-eyed children, a boy and girl, held a responsible position in a large office in Glasgow. His honest earnings, his all, had disappeared, with the failure of his employer, and what was barely sufficient to meet the wants of himself and family. It preys upon his mind; he is becoming gloomy; his wife strives her utmost to cheer him; she places their boy upon his knee; he presses him to his heart with the bitter cry: "Will they take you away, too?" The Sabbath day comes round—his wife thinks the rest of the Holy Sabbath will do him good—also watches him closely and anxiously. His eyes rests upon his boy. He lifts him tenderly and lovingly in his arms. The boy's curls droop as he looks as he strains him to his bosom. He looks at his wife and says, "Don't let them take the boy—here, take care of him while I go and pay my accounts." "Oh, not to-day!" exclaims his wife; "not today, my husband—this is the Sabbath day." She flings her arms about his neck, her very heart bursting with grief as the dreadful truth flashes across her mind. She looks into those eyes that were once full of love for her, with the most loving intelligence—now they are dull, vacant, expressionless—the fire of insanity covered them—the mind behind them was deranged. The poor wife alone, worse than alone, stands before him transfixed with horror and grief unutterable. What a change! A few days ago, and that family were joyous, happy and contented. Now, worse than death has overtaken them. He who was their light, the joy of their hearts, their all, is worse than in confinement—walking about and incessantly muttering, and looking as if searching for some one, and saying, "They have taken all—oh, my boy, where have they taken him to? I want my boy—my God, where is my boy?" etc. But therein lies some of the ravings of a maniac.—Letter from Scotland.

A Lady's Wish.

"Oh, how I do wish my skin was as clear and soft as yours," said a lady to her friend. "You can easily make it so," answered the friend. "How?" inquired the first lady. "By using Ros Bitters, 911 bake pins, rich blood and blooming health. It does it for me, as you observe."

H. HALDEMAN, of Monroe City, Ind., writes under date of Dec. 30, 1877, that his wife used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription with wonderful results. It effected her entire cure, after several physicians had failed. The many similar letters positively affirming that the Favorite Prescription has cured the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women, induced Dr. Pierce to sell it under a guarantee. Ladies need no longer submit to useless and painful local treatment, as the Favorite Prescription is a safe, sure, [illegible] Illustrated, who had been bed-ridden for years have been restored to perfect health by its use.

WILLARD A. SMITH.
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, JAN., 28, - - - 1879.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Jan. 17, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Whenever there is a commotion in the city, at which a riot is imminent, the United States authorities feel the utmost anxiety concerning the immense amount of valuables stored in the vaults of the Sub-Treasury in this city, the largest storehouse of public money in the country. During the late labor riots the employes of the Government in that institution were fully armed and equipped to resist any incursion a mob might make on the Government domain, but happily their preparations were not put to a test. In order to guard against contingencies of a similar nature, especially since the monster vault for the reception of bullion was erected a year or two ago, the Secretary of the Treasury has had the building inspected, and a report made as to the best method of strengthening as well as properly defending it in case of an attack. In the course of time he made his report, which was adopted. Within a few days past a contract was signed by the Treasury Department for steel gratings, bars, and shutters to be attached to the building. Besides this three steel turrets are to be erected on the roof, pierced for musketry, so as to guard against and repel an attack from the tops of adjoining houses. The center turret is to be of octagonal shape. At the same time the Assay Office, adjoining the Sub-Treasury, on Wall Street, will be protected. Mr. Jackson, Superintendent of Repairs and Government Buildings in this city, made the plans for this work and will superintend the construction. The alterations will be commenced in a very few days, and pushed to completion in the shortest possible period. When this is done, we will have at least one citadel in our midst which will defy all communistic efforts.

Broadway, despite its publicity, its wealth, and the care with which it is watched, is about the worst street for large fires in all New York. On last Tuesday night came another of these heavy visitations, at the corner of Broadway and Grand Street, where, early in the evening, the fire broke out in a leisurely sort of way, and despite the efforts of the whole fire department, ate up property to the value of nearly two millions of dollars. The evening was mild and quiet. Had there been a high wind we might of had another Chicago experience. Several large firms were burned out, all carrying immense stocks of goods, most of which were covered by insurance. It took nearly two days to fully extinguish the flames in the burning debris, during which time Broadway was almost impassable at that point, and the tide of its travel checked the adjacent streets.

Mr. Wm. H. Vanderbuilt would doubtless endorse, if requested, the old saying, to the effect that it never rains but it pours. No sooner do the snowdrifts bury the New York Central Railroad out of sight, and bring upon it a loss of something like a million—most of which, of course, comes out of his pocket—than that will contest breaks out fresh in more threatening shape than ever, and then, when the unhappy millionaire seeks to forget his woes by taking the road with his spanking chestnuts, after the manner of his illustrious parent, those spirited animals run away with him and into a sleighful of people, scattering them like a whirlwind, and bringing upon him execrations galore and a large bill for damages.

Poor William feel inclined to succumb under this complication of misfortunes, were it not that their depressing influence is partially counterbalanced by the success of his latest transportation scheme, which is the establishment of a new steamship freight line to Europe, to run under his control in connection with the new York Central Road. The announcement of this new line is received here with great satisfaction, as tending to decrease the talk about the declining commercial supremacy of New York.

Speaking of the oft-repeated stories about the coming eclipse of New York as the metropolis, I happened across some figures the other day which have been compiled by the Building Department, showing the material increase of this city for ten years past. During this period nearly 20,000 new buildings have been erected in New York at a cost of about $300,000,000. The heaviest year for this business was 1871, when $42,000,000 were expended on 2,800 structures. Last year the number was about 1,700 at a cost of $15,000,000. I have no general figures of the doings in this line of other cities which claim the dignity of rivalship with New York, but learn that in 1878 the cost of new buildings erected in Boston was less than $3,500,000. This may be taken, I suppose, as some indication of the comparative growth of New York and other cities. I trust the figures furnish satisfactory encouragement to such of the provincial cities as yearn to wrest the crown of supremacy from Manhattan Island.

The Brooklyn Bridge Company have won the odd trick in the legal game which has been playing for months between them and Comptroller Kelley, of this city. The latter, as is well known, brought proceedings to a standstill awhile ago by refusing to issue bonds to provide for meeting New York's share of the further cost of the structure, on the ground that the limitation on the total cost of the bridge fixed by law had been already overpassed, and that this city had the right to refuse to bleed further for what he intimated is nothing more than a corrupt job. In the lower Court Mr. Kelly's position was sustained; but the Bridge Company went to the Supreme Court, and have this week obtained a reversal of the previous decision and a mandamus ordering the Comptroller to issue $1,000,000 worth of bonds, and pay over their proceeds to the Bridge Trustees without delay. Secretary of State Evarts argued the case for the latter.

Madame Anderson, the plucky little English pedestrienne, finished her long tramp in Brooklyn, this week, with great eclat, after 2,700 consecutive quarter hours of work. The scene at the close of their task is described as being one of the wildest enthusiasm. The building became so packed with people that the police had to stop the sale of tickets, and as the fair walkist made her closing tours of the circle, wrapped in the Stars and Stripes, the popular excitement found vent in frantic cheers. $32,000 gate-money was taken during the four weeks, and the muscular lady has since been given a banquet and a silver service worth $600!

I am now seriously considering the plan of quitting the newspaper business and hanging out my shingle as a "walkist."

RADIX.

Don't Like Grant.

From the Okolona (Miss.) Southern States.

Yankeedom is beginning to understand that our people are still in favor of State's rights and the rule of white men.

That is why she threatens to fall back on Grant, and give him a third term of power.

Well! we have this to say: If Grant is elected and attempts to reinaugurate the reign of damnation and deviltry that characterized his previous administrations he will find himself checkmated after the first move.

The South has recovered the right of home-rule, and she proposes to keep it henceforth and forever—Grant or no Grant—and it a sooner the hell beats of Puritania learn this little lesson by heart the better it will be for their temporal welfare.

The South was helpless and hopeless at the close of our magnificient struggle for liberty, and the Heaven ordained system of human labor; but the hour of our prostration is past; we have the upper hand again, thank God! and Grant, with all his mudsill minions, has no terrors for us.

Let him try his old role of dictator again, and see how it will work.

He will find his mandates as powerless as those of King Canute, who tried to command the motions of the multitudinous waves.

Let Yankeedom elect Grant if she wants to; let her proclaim him emperor if she wants to. He and she will find that his power ends where that of our old commonwealths begins.

The South defies Grant: she defies the vicious vulgarians who prop him up; she defies all potentates and powers outside of the original Constitution of the Union.

A Hillsdale Supervisor is the author of an ingenious plan to increase the crime of perjury in the State by compelling every Supervisor in this State to commit first perjury. This he proposes to accomplish by having the Legislature pass a law, which he has petitioned for, to require every Supervisor to swear to the correctness of assessments made by him. The passage of such a law would prevent any man from accepting the office of Supervisor unless he was willing to commit perjury, and intended to do so. This, it will be seen upon a moment's reflection, is a nefarious plot to declare by law that none but Democrats shall be eligible to the office of Supervisor. It is well known to be the universal belief that any Supervisor, especially in the rural district, who should dare make a "really-and-truly-honest-Injun-hope-I-may-die" assessment roll would be incontinently torn in pieces by the indignant populace. The most that is expected of a Supervisor is that he shall make an assessment roll that isn't any worse than the assessment rolls of the other Supervisors. If it is the least trifle more honestly impartial than the average he is worthy to be crowned with laurels—say a good sized laurel club—for his superior virtue. And now we have this extraordinary petition to compel Supervisors, by law, to take oath to the correctness of their assessments!

Although it is not the precise language of the decalogue, nevertheless its spirit is that thou shalt not bear false witness against thyself, any more than against thy neighbor; but the Supervisor who should make oath that his assessment were correct would, it is the common opinion, bear false witness against both himself and his neighbors. He would accuse himself of the offense of not having fulfilled honorably the expectations which induced some of his constituents to vote for him, and put on airs as being more honest than the taxpayers who elected him; and he would accuse his neighbors of being really as poor as they pretend to be about assessment time. If he could forgive himself, his neighbors could never forgive a Supervisor who should do this. Many a worthy citizen is worth only a certain small amount for the purposes of taxation; but if anybody should publicly accuse him, at any other time of the year, of being really thus poverty stricken, there would be an immediate violent disturbance of the peace and dignity of the people of the State of Michigan in that vicinity. Moreover, this new device is utterly needless. The efficacy of oaths in this matter—that is, their perfect inefficacy—is fully tested by the official oath of each Supervisor to support the constitution, which explicitly requires "actual cash value" assessments, and is systemtically disobeyed.—Detroit Post and Tribune.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many Physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an estimated fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of Lung Diseases. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Colds settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

General News Summary.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—SECOND SESSION.

IN the Senate, on the 14th, a resolution was agreed to, directing the Secretary of the Interior to inquire and report what railroad company, individual or individuals are building a railroad across the public domain in Arizona, and by what authority the road is being constructed. The bill to amend the Patent laws was taken up, and an amendment was agreed to. In the House, in Committee of the Whole, the bill for the payment of pensions to the survivors of the Mexican and other wars, was considered and amended. The Speaker announced appointments to fill vacancies in committees, as follows: Judiciary, Finney (Ala.); District of Columbia, Townshend (Ill.); Foreign Affairs, Acklen (La.); Militia, Young (Ga.)

A RESOLUTION was agreed to in the Senate, on the 15th, instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs to inquire into the circumstances which led to the recent escape of Cheyenne Indians from Fort Robinson, and their slaughter by United States forces. The Conference report on the Military Appropriation bill was agreed to. A communication was received in the House from the Secretary of the Treasury, showing that the aggregate amount of balances on hand to the credit of the Government, in coin, in the National Bank depositaries, on the 1st of January, was $31,000,000. The bill for the further discussion of bill was passed—117 to 72—authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive in exchange for bonds of the United States certificates of deposit of the denominations of bonds authorizing interest at the rate of 3 per cent., and convertible at any time, with accrued interest, into 4 per cents; bonds redeemed to be destroyed and directing that the money so received shall be applied only to the payment of 4 20 bonds. A bill was also passed—134 to 61—making United States notes receivable for duties on imports. A bill was reported to facilitate the refunding of the National debt.

IN the Senate, on the 16th, Mr. Windom introduced a resolution that, with a view to a peaceful adjustment of all questions relating to suffrage, etc., a committee of seven Senators be appointed, to inquire into the practicability of encouraging such grouping, by all just and proper methods, a partial migration of colored persons from those States in which Congressional Districts where they are not allowed to freely and peacefully enjoy and exercise their Constitutional rights as American citizens, into such States as may desire to receive and will protect them in the enjoyment of such rights, or into the Territory or Territories of the United States as may be provided for their use and occupation. Laid on the table for the present, at the request of Mr. Windom. The House bill providing for the payment of arrears of pensions was passed—yeas, 61; nays, 4. In the House, a bill was passed to facilitate the refunding of the National debt. The bill organizing the Mississippi River Improvement Commission, and providing for the improvement of that river, was considered in Committee of the Whole. A bill was introduced to increase the local taxation of legal-tender notes. In the evening session, a memorial in honor of the late Prof. Joseph Henry, in the presence of a vast audience, the President and his Cabinet, Justices of the Supreme Court, members of both houses and members of various societies, with which Prof. Henry had been associated, occupied seats on the floor.

THE credentials of Senator Honston, of Alabama, were presented in the Senate, on the 17th. The bill to amend the Patent laws was further considered and amended. At the request of Mr. Wallace, he and Senator Bayard were excused from further service on the Privileges and Elections Committee to investigate the recent elections, and the Vice-President appointed Messrs. McDonald and Randolph to fill the vacancies. Adjourned to the 21st. In the House, the Senate bill defining the manner in which certain land scrip may be assigned and located by actual settlers, was passed. In Committee of the Whole, the bill for the payment of $20,000 to the Trustees of the Episcopal Semi-nary and High School in Virginia, lost, as all buildings during the war, was debated at length, its opponents asserting it to be a war claim, and its friends claiming it to be a just bill for rent of property.

THE Senate was not in session on the 18th. The Geneva Award bill was taken up in the House, and a substitute was offered as an amendment, reviving and continuing the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims; fixing the number of Judges at three; requiring the Fourth to convene and organize as soon as practicable; in Washington, and limiting the evidence to eighteen months; the claims are classified into three grades; the bill, as amended, was passed—112 to 83. The Senate amendments to the Pension appropriation bill were concurred in.

IN the Senate, on the 20th, a bill was introduced—to provide a uniform National currency; to retire the notes of National Banks, and prohibit their incorporation and their issue of notes; to utilize silver and silver coin, etc. Mr. Morgan submitted a substitute, agreed upon in the Democratic caucus, for Mr. Edmunds' resolutions concerning suffrage and State Constitutional amendments; the resolutions of the substitute declare the new amendments to the Constitution to be as valid and binding as any other part of the Constitution, and that it is the right and duty of the United States, so far as the power has been conferred upon them, to enforce said amendments, and to protect every citizen in the exercise of all rights thus secured; that the Government of the United States and the Government of the several States are distinct, and each has citizens of its own who owe it allegiance, and whom it should protect within its jurisdiction, and must protect; that the Government of the United States is not one of delegated powers alone, that the United States have no reserve of power of their own, created by the States, but the Fifteenth Amendment has invested citizens of the United States with new powers, operative within and under the amendment; Congress may, by appropriate legislation, prevent the denial or abridgment on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude of the voter; that when such right is wrongfully denied or abridged by the action of a person, who is not so acting by authority of or obedient to the laws of a State, the jurisdiction to punish such conduct is in the United States Government and not in the Courts of the United States. The bill to amend the Patent laws was further considered and several amendments were disposed of. A communication was received from the Attorney-General, in which he suggests the appointment of a Commissioner to examine into and ascertain and report whether the canal connecting the navigation of the Wabash and Miami Rivers and Lake Erie, in Indiana, has been abandoned, and if the parties having charge of it have the grant power granted to the State by the General Government, have been forfeited to the United States, and what action is necessary to enable the Government to obtain possession thereof. A bill was introduced in the House—to prevent the adulteration of articles of food and drink; to regulate the charge on Pullman palace and other sleeping cars; making trade and Revenue dollars legal tender; to establish a uniform system of land laws, regulating sales of public lands within railroad limits; to secure to the people of every State equal and just representation. Mr. Potter asked leave to offer a resolution authorizing an investigation of the recent disputches, and to have it adopted under a suspension of the rules, but it was objected to by Mr. Butler, who wished to debate the resolution, and it was agreed that Mr. Potter should report it on the 21st.

DOMESTIC.

IN New York City, on the night of the 11th, a fire destroyed the entire stock of buildings extending from Crosby street to Broadway, on Grand street, and on Broadway on Crosby 100 feet. Large stocks of clothing, fancy goods and notions were consumed, the total loss aggregating about $2,500,000.

THE Giant Powder Works, in San Francisco, located near the Golden Gate Park, blew up, on the afternoon of the 14th. Four white men were killed and an unknown number of Chinamen. The factory and adjoining structures were leveled to the ground.

CHARLES SHARPE and James McDonell, "Mollie Maguires," convicted of the murder of George B. Smith, at Auteudried, Nov. 5, 1869, were hanged at Mauch Chunk, Pa., on the 14th. A few seconds after the Sheriff pulled the rope, and while the men were struggling in their death agonies, the Prison bell was violently rung. On sending to investigate the cause of the disturbance, the door was opened, and in rushed Sharpe's and McDonnell's brothers. Both of them hastened forward to the scaffold, when the brother of McDonnell, a white-haired old man, screamed at the top of his voice: "Oh, you murderers! You have murdered my brother!" They bore a reprieve from the Governor, but it reached the Prison a few seconds too late to be of any avail.

AT the Crosby-street fire, in New York City, on the night of the 14th, a fireman, named Reilly, was killed by a falling wall. When his body was taken home next morning, his wife gazed at it a moment and then fell dead upon the floor.

ACCORDING to Fort Robinson (Neb.) dispatches of the 15th, the troops there had abandoned the pursuit of the fugitive Cheyennes and returned to camp. As soon as they reached their quarters they were met with orders from Gen. Crook directing that pursuit be resumed, and they would start again next day with six days' rations. The escaped Indians number fifty Indians who are led by the Chief Dull Knife.

AS alleged "Mollie Maguire," named Martin Bergan, was hanged at Pottsville, Pa., on the 16th, for a murder committed eight years ago. Bergan met his fate bravely. He was the nineteenth "Mollie" hanged.

IT is stated in the annual circular of Dun & Co. that the total number of failures in the United States during 1878 was 10,478, with liabilities aggregating $234,000,000. This shows an increase over 1877 of 1,371 in number and $4,000,000 in amount.

ANOTHER very destructive fire occurred in New York City, on the night of the 17th, beginning at No. 62 Worth street. Several business firms were burned out, the loss aggregating about $2,000,000.

ACCORDING to a special in the Indianapolis Journal, Leonidas Graves, residing near Newtown, in Fountain County, Ind., was recently instantly killed by a meteoric stone, which struck the roof of his residence and cut its way to the cellar. Mr. Grover was sleeping directly under the roof, and the celestial missile struck him square in the temple with the result stated. It was found imbedded five feet in the ground, and recovered next day.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) dispatches of the 17th say the yellow-fever experts were in session in that city preparing their report. It was reported that the medical members of the commission were unanimous in the opinion that the fever was imported into New Orleans from Cuba, through the very lax quarantine of that city, and the members emphatically favor a National Quarantine act. At the present time, they say, notwithstanding the unprecedented severity of the season, there was a very severe case of yellow fever at New Orleans, which directly controverted the accepted theory that the germs were destroyed by a temperature of 32 deg. Fah.

SEC'Y SHERMAN, on the 18th, issued another call for redemption of $20,(01,(09 5-20 bonds, $10,000,000 coupon and $10,000,000 registered—interest to cease on the 18th of April.

AT Norwich, Conn., on the 17th, Mrs. Nate M. Cobb, who had been on trial for many days before for the murder of her husband, and whom the jury, the night previous, declared to be guilty, was sentenced to imprisonment for life in the State Prison at Weathersfield. She subsequently, through her counsel, published a statement to the public, in which she said she was innocent of the crime of which she had been found guilty. She said she did not question the honesty of the verdict, but it had been secured by perjured testimony. She believed its injustice would some day be made manifest.

IN Washington, a few days ago, the Eleventh Annual Convention of the Woman Suffrage Association was held. Addresses were made, papers read, and a committee appointed to wait on the President and inform him that there were 20,000,000 women in the United States, and that, although he made no mention of them in his late message, it would be well for him not to ignore them in future messages.

THE New Jersey Legislature effected an organization, on the 14th, by electing Republican officials in both branches. The Governor, in his message, says the State debt was decreased $600,000 during the past year.

THE Nevada Legislature, on the 14th, re-elected John P. Jones United States Senator, the joint vote being: Jones, 60; Hillhouse (Dem.), 14. The Colorado Legislature, on the same day, elected S. T. Hill (Rep.) to the United States Senate.

THE Texas Legislature organized on the 14th. John H. Cochrane was elected Speaker of the House. On the same day the Kansas House organized by electing Sidney Clark, Speaker.

THE Democrats of the North Carolina Legislature, on the 15th, nominated ex-Gov. Vance for United States Senator.

ACCORDING to the New York Sun of the 16th, there was good and reliable authority for the statement that Mrs. A. T. Stewart had told at least two persons that the remains of her husband had been recovered. Fifty thousand dollars is the amount said to have been paid for the return of the body.

THE Democratic caucus of the Missouri Legislature, on the 15th, nominated Gen. James Shields for United States Senator, for the short term, and, on the 16th, George G. Vest, for the term beginning on the 4th of March next.

THE Republican members of the Illinois Legislature, in caucus on the evening of the 17th, nominated Gen. John A. Logan for United States Senator. The vote on the first ballot was: Logan, 56; Oglesby, 20.

THE Louisiana House of Representatives, on the 18th, repealed the charter of the Louisiana Lottery Company, by a vote of 69 to 39.

FOREIGN.

A LONDON telegram of the 14th says an explosion had occurred the night before at the Abercarn Colliery, in Wales. There were sixty miners in the pit, and it was believed that not one of them could be saved, as the flames prevented any measures of relief being taken.

A LONDON telegram of the 15th says a Cossack had just been received from Plevna, which reported that Osman Pasha had been killed in the late sortie. Reinforcements were pushing forward to the relief of Osman Pasha, and the Russians were preparing to attack Plevna on the 16th. Another dispatch says that Osman Pasha reported the slaughter of his soldiers, and that he had himself received a slight wound in the hand. Another dispatch says that Osman Pasha had been killed in the sortie, and that the Turks had surrendered Plevna.

CLEMENT L. WALKER, an attorney, of New Orleans, died, on the 15th, concerning the duelling code in that city. He had had three promiscuous fights, and was indicative of the true spirit of the times, when the Conservatives being controlled by the Democrats, he charged generally that there were irregularities and frauds in the conduct of the election, and said he will execute statements of parties who will swear to the truth of them. Subsequently, on his agreed to negotiate the partials, to take the response to Canada and keep them, respectively, after the fight; witness asked protection of Judge Cassell, who was told that the Judge did not consider himself safe in the parish; witness had warnings that his life or his friends and, with his friend Mr. Seymour, after he left near the Sheriff and insurgents, and he fled over into Mississippi. Witness gave the names of fifteen negroes killed to have been murdered.

W. B. Merchant, District Attorney of St. Mary's, testified, on the 18th, concerning the attack on Newman's house, but nothing new was developed.

It was ordered that United States Commissioner Long take testimony of witnesses not examined for Saturday, when Governor Kellogg and Colonels Strong and Marrero appear; the majority, and E. J. Gonzae the minority, of the Returning Board will be examined by Mr. Teller, and treated as if taken by the Senate.

The investigation by the committee left in the evening for Donaldsonville.

THE INVESTIGATION BY THE POTTER COMMITTEE.

THE proceedings before the committee were resumed on the 14th.

J. Henri Burch, Presidential Elector-at-Large of Louisiana, testified that he signed the second set of certificates, having been informed that the first set were informal; knew nothing personally of the character of the frauds.

Mr. Kelly was called, and testified after much persuasion. Knew Packard, Jeffries and Fergus; had he was no more as to the name of Levibacon. He said definite papers were forged by D. B. Penn and A. clerk in Gov. Nicholls's office. Some had been signed by Packard, Jeffries and Fergus, but in cross-examination, witness stated that he had only seen Packard sign one paper. Was requested to change W. Carter, whom he knew in the interest of Packard, to another name, and Carter, who had told witness, as an inducement for him to testify, that no questions should be asked him which would injure him or his friends. Carter also told witness that he had a commission in his pocket, and in his night-clothes carried him a paper, which he said he was to take to Packard, and had sold out to the Bland party, witness denied this and stated he had only some one of the leaders of the Bland party. They left him together, and after midnight he came to the cell and said that he had seen the regular Democratic ticket, he had seen Packard, and had told him that he was with them, and said if they were satisfied witness was also satisfied. Witness replied that he was satisfied with the ticket.

William A. Bell, a prominent merchant of New Orleans, testified concerning the citizens' meeting held in the late election, corroborating the testimony of C. L. Walker.

The Chairman was absent when the committee convened on the morning of the 16th, being detained in New York on account of illness in his family. Mr. Morrison took the chair, and testimony that St. Martin was present, and could be called if the committee desired. At the suggestion of Mr. Cox, it was decided to wait and hear what Mr. Shellabarger had to say before calling St. Martin. Some discussion took place as to whether the latter's affidavit on record. Without taking action, the committee adjourned.

The New Pension Law.

THE Pension bill which passed the National House of Representatives on the last night of the previous session, and the Senate, on the 16th, is as follows:

An act to provide that all pensions on account of death or wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States during the late War of the Rebellion, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted, shall commence from the date of death or disability from which the pension is made to begin, having the form to its fully height.

Down to the dust in bitter pain.

Into all lands a same duty thrust,
Until all arms some burdens given,
Crushing the bears with the victory weight.
Or lifting the soul from earth to heaven.
Into all lands a same hope came,
That God's unshining cross strengthening them
Gilding the ruins of Life's great plan,
Weaving for all a golden crown.

ONLY ME.

A little figure glided through the hall;
In sleep, for it was night, and all was tenderly.
A sob—suppressed to let the answer fall:
"It isn't Pa, mamma; it's only me."

The quivering baby lips—they had not meant
To utter any word could plant a sting;
But to that mother heart a pang was sent
She heard, and stood like a convicted thing.

One instant, and a happy little face
Pushed 'neath unwatched kisses raised above;
And, from that moment, Only Me had place,
And part with Pet in fondest motherlove.

JUDGING BY APPEARANCE.

"Here's a nice place, Mabel," said the elder of the two ladies who had just entered the train. "And well try to keep it undisturbed, too," she added, proceeding to deposit their shawls, sachels, etc., upon the end of each seat, while the two ladies seated themselves facing each other.

They were evidently mother and daughter, the mother large, portly and fine-looking, the daughter a slender, bright-faced little thing, and just as evidently people of wealth and refinement.

"I detest these trains, where every rude person who chooses may intrude upon you," went on Mrs. Glennor, coolly.

Mable knew there was no telling where her mother would stop when once she was on the track, and she noted the flush which overspread the young stranger's face. She quietly changed the subject.

"Do you know Mr. Hamilton's family, mamma?"

"Not the children. Not since they were grown, that is. I saw them when they were little."

"If they are like their noble old father, I'm sure I shall like them. I think he is splendid," answered Mabel.

The strange young lady smiled quietly.

Mrs. Glennor answered:

"I daresay they are. Birth and breeding always show, Mabel. I, for one, could never mistake a person of wealth and culture for a common one."

"Is there only one daughter?" asked Mabel.

"Only one at home, the youngest one, Henrietta. And one son, Richard. I consider it very fortunate that Hamilton invited us to make this visit, Mabel. Richard Hamilton will be very wealthy, and, if you play your cards well, who knows what you may do in the way of a settlement."

"Now, mamma, if you begin to talk that way, I do solemnly declare I will take the next train that passes us back home and not go at all."

Mrs. Glennor knew the girl was quite capable of keeping her word if she was pushed too far, so she said no more, but betook herself to the prospect in view from her window.

The ride was a warm one, but Mabel enjoyed it, and, in spite of her mamma's frowns, chatted with her sensitive very sociably.

It was getting sundown when the train stopped at Hamilton, and several passengers descended, among them Mrs. Glennor and Mabel.

There was a forlorn-looking station, with a dusty little refreshment-bar in one corner of a dingy room, labeled "Ladies' Waiting-room," and there were two three village idlers, with hands in their pockets, promenading up and down the platform, and back again.

"Why, what does this mean?" protested Mrs. Glennor. "Mr. Hamilton wrote his carriage has been at the station to-day?"

"Perhaps it will be here yet, mamma," said Mabel. "Suppose you ask one of these men if it has been seen."

"I believe I will," and Mrs. Glennor marched majestically up to one of the men aforesaid and inquired:

"Can you tell me whether Mr. Hamilton's carriage has been at the station to-day?"

"Yes'm—no'm—I don't know—there it are a-comin' now," was the slightly incoherent answer.

Turning in the direction of his extended finger, she saw a handsome carriage coming rapidly up.

"It is just coming," she announced to Mabel, whose eyes had already informed her of the fact.

They walked toward the dreary platform until it drove up and the driver dismounted.

He came up the steps and addressed Mrs. Glennor, touching his hat respectfully.

"Ladies for Mr. Hamilton's, madam?"

"Yes. Come, Mabel."

"The carriage is ready, ladies. The spring cart is here already to take your luggage over. Will I take your tickets?"

Mrs. Glennor gave him the tickets for the trunks, and the ready comedian soon had them stowed in the light cart which had followed the carriage.

"Now we are ready," declared Mrs. Glennor. But the coachman appeared to be looking for some one else.

"Our young Miss Henrietta went up to town yesterday. We expected her back by this train."

"Here I am, Sam!" called a familiar voice from the door of the ladies' room; and the homely young lady in plain linen, who had shared Mabel's seat, came out of her retreat inside, and approached them.

"My goodness!" was Mrs. Glennor's dismayed ejaculation, as she flushed up to the roots of her hair.

But Mabel sprang forward with extended hand.

"And you are Miss Glennor! I am glad, too!" said the young lady, offering her hand most cordially. "I would have made myself known in the train, but I am always so shy with strangers, and I was not sure who you were till now. Mrs. Glennor, I am very glad to welcome you to Hamilton. I love your daughter already, and I am sure we shall have a delightful visit. Let us go now; Sam is waiting."

With prompt courtesy, so delicately ignoring the rude behavior in the train, was a greater rebuke to Mrs. Glennor than any show of anger could have been.

For once her ready tongue was at a loss, and she only followed her young hostess to the carriage, silently and with flushed face.

But Henrietta's kindly spirit soon put her at her ease, except when she remembered her unwitting blunder.

It was a wholesome lesson, however. And the next time Mrs. Glennor meets a lady in the train, whether she is robed like a Queen or in plain linen, she will treat her as such, and never judge by appearance.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—A brother of George D. Prentice is now a clerk in the Navy Department.

—Some months ago the Roman Catholic ladies in Maine sent to Pope Leo an elaborately-trimmed pair of moccasins, and he has just returned the compliment by sending them a handsome medal.

—Married at Mount Etna, Pa., on the 20th ult., Mr. Leonard Immel, aged 86, and Miss Sarah Keller, aged 87. The bridegroom was so happy that he distributed cash and other necessaries among the spectators in a lavish manner.

—It has been said that the matter which has caused Gov. Hampton most concern during his illness has been a report that his injury was received by being thrown from his horse. The Governor prides himself on his horsemanship.

—The largest individual taxpayer in Boston is Joshua M. Sears, who pays $87,754 on a property of $2,945,400. W. W. Astor comes next on $2,663,500. Moses Williams on $2,051,400, and John L. Gardner on $1,264,500, these being the only men who pay on more than a million.

—The current report that a daughter of Jerry Stanton is employed in the Treasury Department is not true. The lady so engaged is a relative of the late War Secretary, but not a daughter. Cushing, having plenty of leisure time, glanced at the first page and found numerous mistakes; he read the second page and found many more. He read the entire book, and wrote to the publishers that if they expected that he was going to write a complimentary notice of a book with 5,000 errors in it they were mistaken. The publishers of course found fault with his extraordinary statement, and wrote back to the effect that if he would prove this to the satisfaction of Prof. Porter, of Harvard, the editor of the Methodist, they would believe him. Angry at this imputation, this extraordinary man read the pilgrim book over again, and wrote out the 5,000 mistakes and mailed them to Prof. Porter.

Mr. Cushing leaves no direct heirs. His property in Newburyport is estimated to be worth $80,000. Beside this, he owns large tracts of land at St. Anthony Falls, Minnesota, and other places. His total wealth is variously estimated at from $300,000 to $800,000.—Boston Herald.

Solomon's Temple in Wax.

A model of Solomon's Temple, a truly exquisite and beautiful work of art, is to be placed in the Jewish Fair. It is three and a half feet square, three feet high, and is a perfect model of the temple as described by the Scriptures. It is wholly composed of wax flowers and Corinthian columns of white wax, 23,000 flowers of every variety being used in its construction. The roof of the temple is supported by 120 white Corinthian columns of fine proportions, and the whole represents an entire view of the famous Temple of King Solomon, showing the entrances with its arches and entrances to the court of the priests, and two winding staircases leading to the sanctum sanctorum, over the entrance of which hang curtains of crimson satin, and between which may be seen the Ark of the Covenant covered with the pinions of the cherubim. The front of the inner temple bears the inscription of the Tetragrammaton included in the Shekinah formed of golden cupatorriums, with the ineffable name composed of purple flowers of the same variety. The four turrets or towers are made of japonicas, roseboods, azaleas and carnations, and are surmounted by the banners of the tribe of Judah, with the lion, eagle, ox and a man. Over the center arch is the banner of King David, bearing the motto, "Holiness to the Lord," in Hebrew characters, which form the present standard of the Royal Arch Chapter. The windows, representing mosaic stained glass, are composed of various colored carnations. The temple will be inclosed in a show-case of silver and plate-glass. It was made by a Boston woman.—Boston Globe.

Explosives as Fire-Kindlers.

Year after year warnings are published in the newspapers against this practice, in which some house-servants and fewer housewives indulge, of kindling fires with coal oil. Sometimes the warning is a simple account of a fatal accident, sometimes it is in connection therewith. The warnings, however, do not seem to be heeded, and now comes the story of a woman who used bleaching powder with which to kindle a fire, and caused an explosion, fatally injuring herself and two children. The use of powder for kindling fires was not unusual in the army during the war, but the fires were in open air, and the powder was used by men familiar with its properties. They were, indeed, so well acquainted with the danger attending its use, that they never tried the experiment until all other means had failed to quicken a fire, and then with extreme caution. It is scarcely necessary to say that all explosive compounds, and all burning fluids, should be kept away from the stove, and that, under no circumstances, should an attempt be made to add powder or oil to a fire. It is bad enough to saturate wood with oil before lighting it, which is a practice very apt to lead to carelessness and danger, but the attempted pouring of oil on a flame is an act of suicide.—Philadelphia Ledger.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

SAGINAW CITY parties own a tract of land in the neighborhood of Loomis, and, much against their wish, some lumbermen in that neighborhood have made a road across the tract for the purpose of hauling logs. Other efforts having failed to stop the trespass, they secured the services of Col. Norcross, who provided himself with a quantity of Hercules lessening stump powder, and a party of them started for the scene of operations, with the intention of blowing up the road and thus rendering it useless to the loggers. They had hardly arrived on the scene of operations when about a hundred Frenchmen appeared on the ground and drove them off.

Many Michigan newspapers are urging the abolition of the township school superintendent system. For our part, we think it should never have been adopted, and that the sooner it is dropped, and the county system revived, the better.

A strange case is reported from Indiana. Leonidas Grover, a farmer living near Newton, in Fountain County, was killed by a meteoric stone one night last week. The stone weighed twenty-six pounds, and, penetrating the roof, struck Mr. Grover, while asleep passed through the bed and the floor, and buried itself in the earth to the depth of five feet. The cause is the only one of the kind on record.

The National Republican, of Washington, announces the discovery of the fact that the names of seven Electors in Arkansas in 1876 are all signed on the back of the envelope containing the Electoral certificates of that State in the handwriting of the same person. This certificate is one sent back to Arkansas by Vice President Ferry because the signatures of the Electors were not upon the envelope. It was afterward returned to him, thus "corrected," and the vote of that State was counted for Tilden and Hendricks. More work for the Potter committee.

The Graeco-Roman wrestling match between Major J. H. McLaughlin not only threw the Frenchman, but threw him so hard that the right collar bone of the latter was broken, disabling him so that he could not respond when "time" was called for the second bout.

The Legislature of Wisconsin on Wednesday, elected Matt. H. Carpenter once more to the United States Senate, the Republican caucus having ended its long struggle by nominating him by acclamation. By this election Wisconsin will again take a front rank in the Senate, and be represented by a man of commanding ability and brilliant eloquence. If the choice of Senator had been left to a direct vote of the people it would be the same, as Mr. Carpenter is a popular favorite all over Wisconsin.

Major General John A. Logan was elected United States Senator by the Illinois Legislature last Tuesday for the full term, commencing with the 5th of March next. He received the vote of every Republican member in both Houses. He was defeated two years ago by precisely the same tactics that beat Zach. Chandler in this State four years ago, and his election at this time is peculiarly gratifying to all stalwart Republicans, not only in Illinois, but all over the Great Northwest. What the North wants in the Senate is more Chandlers and Logans, and fewer "wif and aif" ciphers. The South sends such men as Hill, Gordon, Lamar, and others of that radical stamp, and to checkmate them, the North should send such statesmen as Ferry, Chandler, Logan Conkling and Blaine.

HELD FOR TRIAL.—Angus J. Cameron, of Boyne, is accused of cutting timber on U. S. lands. He was arrested and had an examination before U. S. Commissioner Call, at Petoskey, and was held for trial at the May term of the U. S. Court at Grand Rapids. He gave bail for his appearance.

MESSRS. Nicholls, Bittars and Inwood, our three jolly Englishmen, with their families, ate "roast-beef and plum-pudding" in Banks, on Friday, at the table of Richard Knight, another "beef-eater." It was undoubtedly an occasion of "spiritous and vinous;" and, O Lor' how the beef must have enforced.

CHARLEVOIX is fast becoming known as the most desirable summer resort of the North. Its cool breezes, facilities for healthful recreation, good society, and beautiful scenery, justly entitle it to its renown. Why should it not be entitled to just as great renown as a winter resort, where the mercury does not reach a point below nine degrees above zero. They should come here from Southern Kansas, where the thermometer has marked fifteen degrees below zero the present winter.

INCORPORATION.

Shall Charlevoix Advance a Step and Incorporate?

Contemplating necessities which follow in the track of growth and accumulation of wealth and population, our law makers have framed acts which are calculated to meet these necessities

Laws are given which are calculated to equalize benefits, by equalizing the expense of obtaining them, and which regulate evils which are inevitable in all towns of any size.

The law authorizing the incorporation of villages and cities was made with these objects in view, and instances are without number where it has been tried and proven beneficial and profitable.

It is generally conceded that Charlevoix has reached a size and importance when incorporation is called for. We have a town renowned for its beauty and of prospects most flattering. Our leading log citizens, with few exceptions, consider that the time has arrived for the town to take this step. The benefits to be derived are many and obvious.

At present, many of our most central and desirable village lots are owned by non residents, who, foreseeing the future importance of the town, hold their property with a tenacity which, under other circumstances would be admirable. They refuse to provide walks along their fronts, and the result is, residents consider a short patch of side-walk on their front of little benefit, while these sand-belts remain for them to walk through. Incorporation will give us a net work of side walks, which, while of general benefit, will enchance the value of every man's property at least equal to the expense incurred. This will not, as has been stated by some, compel the building of side walks to remote and comparatively unsettled points, any more than it will compel the paving of streets We must bear in mind that the people are the regulators in an incorporated village, as much as they are in a township, and more, for their representation is greater.

Another benefit is this: While we have been remarkably free from fires let as not overlook the fact that our village is steadily becoming more compact, and consequently more liable to conflagrations. Incorporation will place us in a position to more effectually guard against carelessness in the instruction of buildings, chimneys, etc.

Incorporation will provide that Jew peddlers and trading vessels hailing from other ports shall pay license for infringing upon a trade which should belong to our merchants.

Experience has taught us also, that the shipping business of our harbor should have the oversight of some person empowered by law to prevent vessels from coming to in the channel, and regulating other evils which are connected with any harbor of the importance of ours.

The "bugaboo" of "expense" and "taxation" is a mistaken idea, and is born of a prejudice which is naturally caused by the burdens imposed by the extravagance of incorporated cities. In a town of this size the matter of expense is in the hands of the people. The officers consist of a President and six trustees, who shall draw no compensation; a Marshal, whose fees come from violators of the law; a Clerk and Assessors, whose duties constitute a portion of what the corresponding officers of the Township now have to do. Substantially, it amounts to a division of the labors and emoluments of the Township Clerk and Treasurer with the Clerk and Assessor of the incorporated village. We see no excessive burden in this, and we are sure there is none when compared with the benefits derived.

The representation on the County Board remains the same as now,—the Township Supervisor representing the village in that body.

To discuss the question, a public meeting is called, to meet at the school house on Saturday evening next. Let every resident of the village attend.

WM E. Parker, of Little Traverse, convicted of cutting timber on Government land, has been fined $340 by the United States Court at Grand Rapids.

BESIEGED BY A RHINOCEROS.

"Baas, baas! spoor groed one-horn akelium!"

Such was the, to me, rather unintelligible announcement with which my friend M——'s brain-box came rushing in just about sunrise one morning, as we were sitting over our breakfast at the door of the travelling waggon of those regular old Dutch-built farm-houses, that are hardly ever seen nowadays, except in South Africa beats them both. Imagine a forest of fish-hooks, relieved by an occasional patch of penknives, and you have it exactly. There is a reason for the spiky thing, called by the Dutch "Wacht-een-beetje," which the English have corrupted into "wait-a-bit," and as it does make you wait a bit if it once gets hold of you. I've known a fellow to be laid up for a fortnight with a gash from one. So you may think I exclaimed,

"Do you, though?" thought I, "then I'll tell you." And so I went on, "Why, the wolves only two years ago, made a raid right into Burlington and killed all the chickens on South Hill."

Consolence raised a terrible protest at this, but I insisted it was too quick, by citing the well-known case of Meigs Schenck's wolf that got loose and in one single summer night ate up everything on South Hill that wore feathers. The native looked astonished and doubly interested.

"Any Indians?" he said.

"Land! yes," I told him, yawning wearily, as one who talks of old, stale things. "Sitting Bull was educated at the Baptist collegiate institute, in Burlington, and was expelled for trying to scalp Prof. Wortman with a horse shoe nail."

"You don't tell me!" exclaimed the native in wild amazement. By this time I was perfectly reckless, and told conscience to keep its mouth shut and give me a chance.

"Oh yes," I said, "Yellow Wolf's old medicine lodge is still standing right out on West Hill. The Indians come into the city very frequently, tearing through the streets on their wiry little ponies."

"Ever have any trouble with them?" the man asked.

"Oh, no," I said carelessly, "the citizens seldom do. The Cow Boys, who come up from Texas with cattle, take them terribly, and occasionally drop one of them in the streets just for revolver practice. But nobody else interferes in their fights."

"I suppose," the man said, "you all carry revolvers strapped around you, out there?"

"Oh, yes!" I replied, "of course. We have to; a man never knows when he is going to have trouble with somebody, and in case of any little misunderstanding, it wouldn't do for a fellow not to be heeled."

I think the man shuddered a little. Then, fearing he might ask to look at my revolver, I casually remarked that I never carried my barkers when I came east.

He said, no, he supposed not. Then he looked out of the window a long time and said nothing. Finally I asked him in what part of Maine he made his home. He looked up at me in surprise.

"Me?" he said. "Bless you, I don't live in this rock patch. I'm only on here visiting some relatives."

In a feeble voice I asked him where he did live then.

The man yawned, and again looked listlessly out of the window.

"Oh," he said, "I live on a farm just out by Leffler's; about six miles out of Burlington. I wish I was back there now."

So did I. So did I. I wished no half never left there.

We didn't talk together any longer. Shortly after that the weather changed, the car grew cold and I went into the smoking car to look for a fire.—Burdette, in Letter to Burlington Hawk-Eye.

A Romance of the Snow Blockade.

The particulars of the affair have just come to our possession, and, although it is to be presumed that the parties most intimately interested have no particular desire to court notoriety on account of their romantic experience, it will do no harm so long as no names are mentioned. It may be stated, however, that the hero of the affair is a bookkeeper in a prominent manufacturing establishment in this city, and that he loved, both wisely and well, a maiden who resided with her parents in a small village a few miles this side of New York City. That she did not entirely discourage his advances may be inferred from the fact that they had decided to marry and become as one on Christmas Day, and every preparation was made for the consummation of their earthly hopes. The ceremony, of course, was to be performed at the young lady's home, and the day before Christmas the expected groom packed his dress suit in a trunk and started for the scene in which he was to play so important a part. But occasionally the best-laid plans are most effectually blocked, and in this case the snow came down to take a little hand in the game. The drifts grew deeper, conductors commenced to look serious and the result may be readily guessed. The train was stuck fast in a snow-drift, the storm was constantly increasing, and to cut long story short, the journey was rather dubious. Forty miles had the young man to go, but it might as well have been four hundred, as the hours came and went he became desperate, and at last telegraphed to the to-be father-in-law the situation. The reply came: "Come on; we are waiting for you." But the young man couldn't go, and he so intimated over the telegraph wires. At last it came to pass that the ceremony, and guests and relatives had assembled at the house, while the minister was momentarily expected. Only one thing was wanting, and that was the young man who was wearing out his hair in the snow-bank. Everyone knows the prejudices existing against postponed marriages, and the guests wept, but without avail, though her tears were warm enough and copious enough to have thawed the snow for twice the distance. Among the guests was a telegraph operator, and in a happy moment he was struck by a bright thought, and he lost no time in communicating it. Distance should be obliterated and the couple should be married by the aid of telegraph. The guests were delighted with the proposition, the bride dubious, but at last she consented to make the experiment. Fortunately the telegraph office was not far distant, and the wire was soon stretched to the house, while the operator got his instruments in order and made a connection. The young man was notified of what had taken place and what was about to take place, and instructed to consent. Affairs progressingly. He was a little dazed by the scheme, but soon recovered, and, taking his place at the side of the operator in the station, he announced that he was ready for business. The minister made the service as short as possible, but the ring was very readily, and were awaited with breathless interest by the assembled company. It was a curious scene, when at last the minister announced "What love (he was a Unitarian) and the telegraph have joined together let no man cut asunder," there was an enthusiastic round of applause. The young man was not there, and yet he was married. The girl was not within forty miles of the man she loved, and yet she married him. It was the triumph of science over difficulties.—Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat.

A NEWSPAPER office and a theater are in very close contiguity in London. Recently the knights of the quill discovered a pair of pheasants hanging in the manager's window. As they got up an improvised fishing-net the pheasants passed from the abode of Thespis to the shrine of Minerva. The next move was to send the birds to the manager of the theater, with the request that he would accept a trifling gift of game and an intimation that if he had a spare box to spare that evening the donors would be very grateful. The manager promptly responded with a note of thanks and an order for a stage box.

THE King of Sweden averted a financial panic in Stockholm by opening a heavy private account with one of the principal banks, concerning whose stability disquieting rumors were current. The King's act restored confidence, and probably prevented very disastrous consequences.

A LITTLE six-year-old, upon finding a lone and solitary stick of candy in his stocking on Christmas morning, mournfully exclaimed, "Gracious! if I had been born twins, I'd only got half this much!"—Norristown Herald.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—Prof. Gorini is at the present moment in London, employed in superintending the erection of a funeral pyre upon the site belonging to the Cremation Society, near London. The pyre is upon the system which has been approved in numerous cremations at Milan and other places in Italy.—British Medical Journal.

—A London writer says: "I have had shown to me a photograph in which the colors of Nature are to some extent reproduced. The process is a dead secret. It is easy enough to see that the painting is not by hand, easy enough, too, to detect the photograph. The shading is exquisite. The form is, of course, that of reality. But it is still not Nature exactly, and I suspect that only certain colors—red and green among them—can be coinced by chemical combination."

—In spite of the doubtful existence of some of the cities as marked in the list," says Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, in Nature, "I can entertain no doubt whatever that the principal commercial crises do fall into a series having the average period of 10.46 years. Moreover, the almost perfect correspondence of this period with Brown's estimate of the sun-spot period (10.45) is by itself strong evidence that the phenomena are connected. The exact nature of the connection cannot be established."

—Thus far the borings on the French Coast, in connection with the proposed English Channel Tunnel, confirm the possibility of the execution of the scheme. The geological considerations are all favorable. But there is no reason to believe that there will soon be any vigorous and systematic attempt on the part of the English to push forward the enterprise and make its actual accomplishment probable. Lately, influential people in England have grown very apathetic about the great tunnel.

—A very effective glue mixture is said to be employed by Turkish artisans, in the inlaid work of attaching diamonds and other jewels to their metal settings. In the production of this substance, the method pursued is to dissolve five or six lbs of gum arabic, each of the size of a large pea, in as much spirits of wine as will suffice to render it liquid; in another vessel, as much isinglass—previously softened in water—is dissolved in brandy as will make a viscous liquid of strong glue, adding two small bits of gum ammoniac, this being rubbed until dissolved. The whole is then mixed with heat, and kept in a vial closely stopped; when it is to be used, the vial is set in boiling water. This cement resists moisture, and will indissolubly unite two surfaces of polished steel.—Exchange.

—A plan is now being discussed by English engineers, by which not only the water of the Nile, but the silt—of which the greater portion is now wantonly deposited in the Mediterranean Sea—shall be turned to good account as a fertilizer of the deserts of Nubia, Libya and the Soudan. To this end there is proposed the construction of a system of engineering works by which a portion of the Nile flood water, with its annual burden of soil robbed from the fertilizing slopes of the Abyssinian highlands, shall be diverted into these deserts, where it may deposit its rich sediment on the sands, and also irrigate them, and thus completely transform the desert. This desideratum, it is thought, may be accomplished by the erection of suitable dams and sluices at different points of the Nile, which structures, it is believed, would also improve the navigation of the river.

—In consequence of the continued cost of boxwood and its rapid decrease in quality, English dealers are now using large quantities of our American cornel and persimmon as substitutes in the manufacture of shuttles. The wood of the first named, though small in size, is hard, heavy, and close grained, has been largely used for the handles of tools as well as for shuttle making, and, when properly seasoned, is much superior to Persian boxwood. The wood of the persimmon, a well-known tree of the ebony family, growing to a height of fifty to sixty feet, and a diameter of twelve to eighteen inches, the heart-wood being of a dark-brown color and very hard. One dealer in Germantown in the preparation of these woods for shuttle making is that of a very gradual drying by artificial means—this being more particularly recommended in respect to the cornel, an undue haste in seasoning which having led to prejudice against the wood.—*N. Beautiful Celestial Phenomena.

A correspondent writing to the New York Evening Post from Breckinridge, Minn., gives the following account of a celestial phenomena which he recently observed there:

"A remarkable phenomenon was observed here at the beginning of the evening, Jan. 3. The mercury at the signal station on the morning of the 1st of January registered 24 deg., on the 2d 32 deg., and on the 3d 28 deg. below zero. The sky was clear and the short daylight was bright with sunshine on those days. In the early evening of the 3d about six o'clock p. m., the cold being still intense, a very bright circle appeared around the moon, estimated to cover about 5 deg. of the canopy, the moon, not yet at the full, giving off a remarkable effulgence of light, and in its position lacking about 10 deg. of the meridian. Another circle much larger and central to the zenith, nearly as bright as a rainbow in colors, cut the former circle in two places of intersection, and included the brilliant moon within its sweep at equal distances from the crossing of the circle upon each other. Outside of the points of intersection distant from them 1 or 2 deg. was splashed at acute angles across the larger and brighter circle sun-dogs (or moon-dogs) very distinctly painted. The sun climbed that morning above the level prairie horizon with a broadly based pyramid of gold whose spire, cathedrine, was projected upward several degrees, and on either side appeared a like sun-dog pattern somewhat less brilliant but without showing the fiery figure of the sun itself, glowing in the base of its own pyre but enlarged to the eye some forty or fifty diameters. The circles at evening as described appeared almost an hour after the sun had gone below the horizon, and lasted in view no more than twenty or thirty minutes. Were both circles caused by the moon or was the larger one painted about the zenith, refracted from the sun so long passed below the horizon?"

A New Dodge.

"You're a reporter, are you?" inquired a broad-shouldered, stumpy-looking man yesterday. "I was readin' that thing in your paper about the fellows wot's a-swindlin' bar-tenders with that paddock trick. That's only one out of a hundred tricks the rounders are up to. Here's a new wrinkle: There came into my place the other night a sick-lookin' young feller with nice, white-lookin' hands, that I dropped to right away. There was several of the boys in there takin' their ale. By and by they got on delightful-hand tricks. I see the stranger's eyes begin to glisten, a-sort of as though he was about to show his hand. He asks for a glass of water, and takes it in his hand. Then he outs with a nice white, perfumed handkerchief. Then he inquires: 'has any gentleman a half dollar?' Of course one was produced, 'cause the boys want to see what's up next. Then he takes the half-dollar between his fingers, put the perfumed handkerchief over both and covers it with the glass. Then he gets one of the company to take hold of a roundish thing in the handkercher, which anybody would s'wear was the half-dollar. 'Now, jist let her drop,' he says, withdrawin' his own hand. And drop she does, and the jingle is heard plain enough, but you can't see anything, 'cause the handkercher covers the glass. Then the nigger is the woodpile comes in. 'I'll bet any gentleman here,' the genteel feller sez, 'that that half-dollar ain't in the glass.' 'O, git out,' half the boys say. 'Why, we heard it drop.' 'Well, if you're all so sure,' he says, 'why don't you put your stamps up that it is in there?' The upshot is that, thinkin' they had a sure thing of it, two of 'em did bet him a dollar, just for the fun of the thing. Then he lifts off the handkercher and they all crowd around him and look into the tumbler and sure enough the half-dollar is there. 'I'll be gosh blamed,' sez each of the fellers who lost their quarters. 'It's the most wonderfullest.' Then his nibs pockets his winnins, and empties his glass of water, but not too quick for me to see that he catches before it falls a roundish piece of glass, just the size of a half-dollar. That's what fixed their flints. When that genteel person tried to drop the half-dollar in the glass, he let fall the circular thing, which he must have had concealed in his coat-sleeve beforehand, and substituted for the half-dollar. Of course, when it fell into the tumbler, it just fitted the bottom, and being transparent, when the fellers looked in they couldn't tell it from the bottom of the tumbler. Maybe they wasn't mad when I told 'em, after he'd gone, about that glass thing."—Philadelphia Times.

Dr. Busby.

Perhaps some of the boys who read the Gossip have not heard about the famous old school-master, who lived in England many years ago.

He was what is called a great "disciplinarian." He had the strictest of rules in the government of his school, and woe to the boy who dared to violate them! Why, the very name of "Dr. Busby" will strike terror to the hearts of timid schoolboys in England to this day.

It was a jrutty courageous boy who, one day in the doctor's absence from the school-room, found some plums, and, holding up some in his hand, said, in a loud voice, "I publish the banns of matrimony between these plums and my mouth; if any here present know just cause or impediment why they should not be united, are now to declare it, or ever after hold your peace!" Then he ate them.

The doctor was in an adjoining room, and heard it all, but said nothing until the next morning, when, causing the boy to be "brought up," he grasped the rod and said, "I publish the banns of matrimony between this rod and this boy: if any one here present knows just cause or impediment why they should not be united, let him now declare it, or ever after hold his peace!"

The boy coolly cried out, "I forbid the banns of matrimony in this case!"

"For what cause!" said the doctor.

"Because the parties are not agreed."

The severe but not ill-natured doctor dropped the rod and laughing heartily at the boy's courage and wit, sent him to his seat.—Youth's Companion.

—The following is said to make an excellent cement for sealing bottles: Mix three parts of resin, one of caustic soda, and five of water; this composition is then mixed with half its weight of plaster of paris. The compound sets in three-quarters of an hour, adheres strongly, is not permeable like plaster used for this, and is attacked only slightly by warm water.

Set the mixture in a warm place, and shake it twice or thrice a day; when it is dissolved, cork during the shaking. Four or five days will be sufficient for dissolving the resin, when it will be fit for use.

Prizes for Potatoes.

At present potatoes are selling in this market for about the same price as wheat, which is some three times the price of corn, and four times the price of oats. In other words, the country there is a potato famine. It is almost impossible to procure very fine potatoes at any price. The quality of potatoes has fallen off, while the quality of other farm crops has improved during the past few years. The crop must be neglected is potatoes. Farmers have apparently lost their interest in growing good potatoes. Since the advent of the early rose, no new variety has been introduced of very great promise, and that appears to be running out. The catalogues of seedsmen and nurserymen are full of new varieties of flowers, vegetables, shrubs, vines and trees, but new varieties of potatoes are scarce and of doubtful value. It is certainly high time to have a new potato fever that shall extend all over the country.

The subject of potatoes is rarely mentioned in agricultural papers. No political speaker mention potatoes, though they talk very learnedly about corn and wheat. At many of our agricultural fairs no potatoes are visible except on the table of the eating-houses. The poorest article of food on any table is potatoes. Possibly few farmers raise potatoes that they care to exhibit at fairs. If they have any that they desire to show they would quite likely find that no premium was offered for them. It is certainly astonishing that so little interest is taken in raising fine potatoes, seeing that their quality varies much more than that of any kind of meat, grain or fruit. Good potatoes, dry, mealy, of fine flavor, constitute a luxury. A dish of fair, smooth potatoes is an ornament to any table. Still, while there is improvement in almost everything else that we eat there is constant deterioration in potatoes. It is time for agricultural societies to give some encouragement to the raisers of potatoes and the originators of new varieties. The country is pretty well stocked with short-horned bulls, and every considerable town supports a race-track. Prizes for enormous bulls and rapid trotters might give place to premiums for potatoes at least one season. Let there be a string of prizes for potatoes as long as that for pure-bred cattle, and there would be a revival of interest in this neglected tuber that is the delight of every palate. Premiums of considerable amount should be offered for the largest yield and the best quality of distinct varieties, for the greatest number of named varieties, and, above all, for new varieties and varieties brought from other countries. These suggestions are made for the consideration of the managers of agricultural fairs who are now considering the subject of premium lists, with the earnest hope that they will take the matter in hand.—Chicago Times.

Care of Stock.

We hear some farmers say that they believe in bedding stock, but they can't afford straw for this purpose when it brings in market almost as much as hay. Good rye straw doubtless does do the best for bedding, as its large hollow stalks will absorb large amounts of liquid; but straw is not the only substance that will make a fine and comfortable bedding. Dry leaves are no mean substitute for straw. They are not so good an absorbent, but they make warm beddings, and every farmer should secure in the fall a large pile of them. A bed of leaves is always selected by a cow when "leaves have come in full." This tidge fattening on mast in the forest make themselves as comfortable in a bed of leaves as their ancestors did in feather beds. Leaves are certainly more wholesome than feathers, as they emit an aromatic odor, whereas feathers often give out an animal effluvia which is neither pleasant nor healthful.

Another substitute for straw is sawdust. This in many parts of our country, is thrown away as useless, while in others it is eagerly bought at a cent or two per bushel, and utilized for bedding. It is a good absorbent, and makes a dry, soft bed. In itself it does not amount to much as a fertilizer, but when saturated with urine it ferments quickly, and serves to make land more porous and open to the influences of light and air. We have found an abundance of sawdust with a thin covering of straw to make most comfortable sleeping quarters for stock. The sawdust that was made from hard wood will make better manure than that of pine, hemlock or other soft woods, and very likely on account of containing more potash; but soft wood sawdust is more aromatic, and keeps the air of the stable pure. The balsam from pine has great healing virtues, is excellent for diseased lungs, and indeed, for all diseased viscera, and no bedding can be better than pine sawdust for the sore and tender feet of horses. There is pine sawdust enough made in the country to supply the wants of every farmer in this line, but the trouble is that it is not made where it is wanted. It will, however, pay for transporting by horse power a longer distance than most farmers suppose, as it is light stuff—100 bushels of fresh dust can be hauled at one load—and we expect to see the time when it will be an article of traffic on our railroads. We recommend sawdust for bedding with the more confidence, as we have tried it for twenty years and know its virtues. In summer we prefer it to anything else, as it is so clean, healthy and easily handled. In winter it does not make so warm a bed as straw, but this defect may be obviated by using it as an under-bed with an upper one of straw. The straw will last much longer enough longer to pay for the extra expense, and the air of the stable is kept much purer.

Sawdust has no rival for absorbing all effluvia, and keeping the air of the stable sweet, unless it is dry, fine soil. Straw and sawdust may not be had in all localities, but no farmer can say that he has no soil, and therefore every one is without excuse who compels his cattle to stand on the bare floor or boards. There is the same objection to soil for bedding in the winter as there is to sawdust, that if the stables are kept warm, as they should be, the objection has little weight. Fine sand, such as is used for making mortar, serves a good purpose for bedding, but does not add so much to the value of the manure as the fine alluvial soil which we find by the side of rivers, or in some hollow which takes the wash of neighboring hills. This alluvial, horse-d in dairy time, makes excellent bedding, is a good absorbent, and is particularly valuable for adding to the virtues of the manure, being in itself rich with saline matter. One great advantage of using soil for bedding is that it makes compost daily, and the manure of horses even does not "fire-fang" when thrown out in conjunction with it. The increased value of the manure alone pays for all the labor involved in bedding stock with alluvial soil.

Dry muck is sometimes recommended for bedding, but it is too dirty. It is a good absorbent of liquids and gases, but when wet it sticks to cattle and men, and gives anything but a tidy look. Neither is it so valuable as a fertilizer as good alluvial soil.

After all that can be said in favor of other materials for bedding, the great majority of farmers will continue to rely on straw, and as this is cheap and abundant this winter, it should be used liberally. Freely we have received, freely let us give it to our stock, and thus add to their comfort and thrift and our own profit. Whoever withholds bedding from his stock "withholds more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty." When straw is worth twenty dollars per ton, and rapid trotters might give place to premiums for potatoes at least one season. Let there be a string of prizes for potatoes as long as that for pure-bred cattle, and there would be a revival of interest in this neglected tuber that is the delight of every palate. Results of Aerial Navigation.

Mr. E. C. Stedman, the poet, writes in the February Scribner of this subject, which he confesses to be his "hobby." The paper is in a half humorous, half serious tone, but discusses practically the causes of failure heretofore and the desiderata of final success. Mr. Stedman speaks thus buoyantly of some of the ultimate results of aerial navigation:

Not only by these processes of construction, but also by the power and freedom gained through their success, a delightful relax influence will be exerted upon the esthetics of life. Poetry and romance will have fresh material and a new locale, and imagination will take flights unknown before. Landscapes painted between earth and heaven must involve novel principles of drawing, color, light and shade. Music, like the songs of Lohengrin, will be showered from aerial galleys. In every way the resources of social life will be so enlarged that at last it truly may be said, "Existence is itself a joy." Sports and recreations will be strangely multiplied. Rich and poor alike will make of travel an every-day delight, the former in their private aeronons, the latter in large and multiform structures, corresponding in use to the excursion-boats of our rivers and harbors, the "floating palaces" of the people, and far more numerous and splendid. The rush of the earth, its races places, will be visited by all. The sportsman can change at pleasure from the woods and waters of the North, the runways of the deer, the haunts of the salmon, to the pursuit of the tiger in the jungle or the emu in the Australian bush. An entirely new profession—that of airmanship—will be thoroughly organized, employing a countless army of trained officers and "airmen." The adventurous and well-to-do will have their pleasure yachts of the air, and take hazardous and delightful cruises. Their vessels will differ from the cumbrous acrobats intended for freight and emigrant business, will be christened with beautiful and suggestive names—Iris, Aurora, Rote, Ganymede, Hermes, Ariel and the like—and will vie with one another in grace, readiness and speed.

An Omish Wedding.

Doubtless many of our readers are familiar with the customs and habits of the religious sect known as the Omish; but it is to be questioned if many of them know how an Omish wedding is conducted. The Omish differ from the Mennonites in their simplicity of dress, and being more strict in their discipline. They also hold their religious meetings in private houses. Their own ministers perform the marriage ceremony, which is seldom the case with the Mennonites.

A wedding-day among them is an important event. All the relatives and friends of the families assemble at an early hour. A stranger to pass by and see the yellow carriages in groups in a field adjacent to the house would be awe-stricken. On the arrival of the guests each one unhitches from the carriage his own horse and secures for it a place in the stable. The ceremony begins at eight a. m. The bride and groom, with their attendants, occupy a room and sit face to face, the men on one side and the women on the other. The remaining guests sit in other apartments of the house. The services consist in singing and preaching (all in German), and when this is over, which lasts till twelve o'clock, the couple to be married advance to the preacher and the wedding ceremony is pronounced. Then follows the dinner. In a short time the tables are fitted up and bountifully supplied with roast turkey, beef and vegetables. To this all who can find room sit down, after which the tables are again supplied with cake and wine, at which the young people congregate and spend an hour in singing, when they partake of the delicacies spread before them. The older persons then follow and enjoy the good things, which consumes considerable time.

At six o'clock a supper is spread, which remains on the table during the night. It is at this hour (six o'clock) the festivities begin. All repair to the barn, which has been thoroughly cleaned for the occasion, and indulge in the old-time plays. These amusements are kept up till after midnight, when all parties wend their way homeward.—Lancaster (Pa.) New Era.

An Amateur Mourner.

Mr. L. was a gentleman of independent fortune, which he squandered in the course of a few years in gratifying one of the oddest whims that could ever enter the mind of a rational being. His sole enjoyment was the attending of funerals. When he heard of the death of any great man, through the channels of the papers, he immediately made the circuit of the whole town to know who had the job, and then proceeded to accompany it. He has often been to York and the confines of Scotland to be present at the interment of a nobleman or gentleman, and in this respect he was in no way biassed by party or religion; it was the same to him if he was Whig or Tory, out or in; whether a Roman Catholic or a Protestant, a Jew or a Presbyterian; they equally commanded his respect and attention, provided the funeral was magnificent. His highest ambition was to obtain one of the little escutcheons which he considered as so many trophies of his glory, and long known to most of the undertakers, and their constant companion in their peregrinations, they seldom or never refused his request. Being entirely inattentive to his own affairs, he found himself in a state of distress when he did not expect it; yet, though reduced to almost the worst of the common necessaries of life, his passion for deathhunting still prevailed, and when he could ride he walked on foot. But whenever the journey was of any length he hired the hearse-driver to let him be an inside passenger with the corpse. In this doleful state he traveled more than once; but unfortunately fell a martyr to his strange whim. Being an inside passenger on one of these solemn occasions, in very hot weather, and there being no air-hole, as there usually is, in the hearse, when they took out the corpse they found poor Mr. L. dead from suffocation.—London Times.

Hijah and his Boots.

"What on earth ails you this time?" sharply demanded the Court, as Hijah limped across his path to the desk.

"Boots," was the brief reply.

"Who booted you?"

"I want it understood that I've got a new pair of boots, and that they hurt my feet!" answered the janitor.

"Where are they—show 'em to me?"

Hijah limped into the corridor and brought out one. He was a little pale around the mouth, and his voice trembled as he said:

"It's plenty big enough, but the heel don't set right."

His Honor looked from the boot to Hijah's foot and back, and a look of horror settled down upon his face as he said:

"Well, I'm now ready to lay down and die! When a man seventy-eight years old, bald-headed, ugly-looking, and with hands as big as wall-baskets, will deliberately try to crowd a No. 13 foot into a No. 12 boot, we might as well go under ground."

"That boot is even too big for me!" persisted Hijah.

"Too big! Too big! Bijah, have you decided in your old age to gain notoriety as a falsifier? Too big! Great guns! but they'll have to have a second story added before you could wear a stocking with 'em!"

Hijah walked away with quivering chin. It isn't right for anyone to abuse another's feet. Feet are something none of us can help, especially big feet. —Detroit Free Press.

THEOLOGICAL students reason that if there be counterfeit money, there must be genuine; so if there be infidels, there must also be Christians. If this be true of money and religion, will not the same rule apply to "patent" medicines? Do not the sheer and worthless nostrums prove that there are genuine and meritorious "put up" medicines? The great popularity of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has resulted in the manufacture of many cheaply alterative and tonic remedies, but one after another these have disappeared, the proprietors having found that, no matter how loud they advertise, success depends upon merit. In South America, as well as in this country, the Discovery is the standard remedy for all scrofulous and eruptive diseases. FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Jan. 24, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Last week I chronicled the disastrous fire on Broadway which wiped out almost two millions of property. The embers of that conflagration were still smouldering when another occurred nearly one-half more destructive in the heart of the dry goods district. In the latter, as in the former case, the peculiarly favorable condition of the weather alone prevented an unparalled catastrophe. These warning calamities have impressed and alarmed the whole city by showing to what an extent we are at the mercy of the destroying element. The insurance companies, of whom have thus seen swept away within a week more than their possible profits for the year thus inauspiciously begun, are naturally greatly aroused, and have just been investigating, through a Committee, the condition of the lower part of the town.

The report of the Committee, shortly to be published, will give some startling facts as to the belt of peril which surrounds the business section of the island, in the shape of the wooden piers and sheds which line the water's edge.

The report states that on the Hudson River front alone there are sixty-two piers of wood, and of this number fifteen have either stationary boilers upon them or boilers upon wheels; on many there are grist mills and elevators, using stationary power, and on ten there are blacksmiths shops in full operation. from the Battery to the foot of Charles street there are upon these piers four and a half miles of wooden sheds. In a few cases the roofs are of corrugated iron, but the sides, and of course the foundation are of light wood. Eight of these piers have absolutely no protection from fire, not even a hydrant or an extinguisher. Nineteen of the piers have no hose upon them, and only seven of the entire number have watchmen provided with watch-clocks. The Committee discovered that on the piers where hydrants are placed there is no water at night, it being the custom to shut off the water for fear of its freezing in the pipes. The keys are locked in the office, and water could not be procured without great delay. Upon these piers they discovered not only the most valuable, but the most inflammable goods in the city stored in immense quantities or awaiting shipment. It seems only a question of time, and perhaps of very short time at that, when most of New York has got to go.

The masses of snow which have fallen in the city recently have been terribly obstructive of travel. Double teams to half loads have been the rule, with slow progress at that. Our able and efficient Street-cleaning Department didn't seem to notice anything unusual in the appearance or the streets for a week after the snow fell, but at length some one must have told them about it, for they finally made up their minds to clear the incumbrance from the leading through fares. It is no small job to clear Broadway after such a storm, as may be inferred from the fact that it took 1,000 men and 600 carts from a daylight till six o'clock in the evening to accomplish it, during which period they shoveled up, carted away, and dumped into the rivers some nine thousand cart-loads, weighing close onto two thousand tons.

"The venerable PeterCooper," as the reporters never tire of calling our aged and amiable philanthropist and Green backer, whose white-fringed countenance grace the platform of about every other public meeting that is held in New York, and appears above the festive board at a still larger proportion of our public dinners, is still hearing from his presidential campaign of two years ago. Suit has been pending against him in the State Courts for some time past, in which the plaintiff, a man named Groom, claims $50,000 damage for libel. Groom seems to have occupied the relation to Cooper during that campaign that Stanley Mathews and Stenmer did to Hayes, or Pelton and Barbie to Tilden; and when all was over, Mr. Cooper accused Groom of misusing his money. The latter felt greatly aggrieved and brought suit, only, however, to be badly defeated. During the trial Mr. Cooper took the stand (figuratively speaking. In point of fact, he sat upon the inevitable air-cushion,) and as he is very apt to do whenever he speaks on any subject, gave a condensed autobiography, informing the Court, among many other particulars, that if he lived he would finish his eighty-eighth year next month. Before he was twenty-one years old he had learned three trades, those of hatter, brewer, and carriage maker. It was fifty-one years ago he began to sell the laboring classes. In his sixty years of business he could not remember a time when his workmen had to wait for their money; the reason was he had kept clear of banks. Although a candidate two years ago, he had no expectation of being President of the United States. He had paid out a good deal of money for expenses. He could not say how many men he had paid who said they had watched the polls for him on election day. The court-room would not hold them. They had been coming to him ever since for their pay, and were coming yet.

Some detectives in the U. S. Secret Service have successfully accomplished a difficult and delicate job in tracing and arresting a man named Ulrich, said to be the most skillful engraver of counterfeit money in the country. A few years ago he was imprisoned for executing a bogus $100 bill on a Boston bank, so perfect that $1,000,000 of it were put in circulation. He was pardoned out, however, and soon returned to his old occupation. When the raid was made on his house in the little village whither he had been traced he was found at work engraving by hand the geometrical lathe-work of the back of a $100 Treasury note, which is done by the Government with a machine that cost $100,000 and which it had been supposed could not be imitated. Ulrich's work, however, was almost perfect.

See what noble ambition the success of the recent pedestrian matches here have been able to awaken in the provincial breast! In Paterson a man has started on an attempt to walk 450 miles in six days, resting only three hours each day. In the same town, another enterprising party is endeavoring to gain wealth and reputation by keeping awake for six days. One Mackey, of Passaic, calls himself "Champion Raw Onion Eater of the World." Michael Burns is going to eat against him for $500 "and gate-money." Another man wants to "eat a barrel of raw onions against time," claiming that he can do so in four days. And in a day or so, another hero will charge the public an admission fee to see him try to "eat six pounds of raw codfish in two hours." Who can say that the tendencies of the age are not ennobling and refining.

Church organizations have become famous for their ingenuity in devising means for "raising the wind." I don't remember, however, to have heard of anything more striking and original in this line than the scene now being executed by a suburban Catholic society, to dispose of their church edifice by a lottery, chances one dollar each. If any of your readers happen to want a nice church for any purpose, here is their opportunity.

RADIX.

THE Lenawee county Treasurer gets $300 a year.

Tilden says that if he can fix things up in New York Democracy, he is good for 1880.

The Pennsylvania politicians regard the Cameron victory as an assurance of the State for Grant.

Ex-Senator Boutwell is a candidate for the position of Assistant Treasurer of the United States Sub-Treasury of Boston.

Of all personal triumphs of American politicians, the Buffalo Express does not know where to point for a parallel to this third election of Mr. Conkling to the Senate.

The Washington Post, Tramp, says the election of Logan to the Senate is a blighting disgrace. In the days of the rebellion, John A. Logan was assigned to the command of the legions who went down South to visit the grayback fellows of the Tramp, and these graybacks never liked him!

Lieut Gov. Underwood, of Kentucky, is stumping the State in his own behalf making himself popular with the intellectual Kentuckians by fiddling and dancing.

General Grant has lately written to a friend in Washington: "I see they are hammering away at the army again. There is no peace for the army except in time of war." A good joke even if the Sphynx did do it.

The New York Tribune thinks that the uniform course of sending nobody but whipped rebels to Congress from the South will give the Democrats the liviest kind of a circus when these greybacks get into power.

A National bank in Oswego, New York, has suspended on account of too high taxes for the low rates of interest. Yet there are still some who foolishly suppose that national banks make enormous profits and pay little or no taxes.

The Ameer of Cabul, in his flight before the British, is preceded by nine elephants and 2,000 horses, carrying his women, baggage and treasure. These trifling incumbrances are certainly not calculated to facilitate rapid transit.

The question of building a new court house and jail is to be submitted to the people of Montcalm county, this State, at the April election. It is proposed that these buildings shall cost $30,000. Of this sum Stanton citizens pledge themselves to furnish $10,000.

Among the candidates for Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate is General Corse, the hero of Allatoona, who signaled to Sherman, "I am short a cheek and an ear, but can whip all h— yet." Upon the message to which this was an answer "Hold the Fort" was founded.

As to Mr. Chandler.

From the Vyatland Commercial.

Carpenter, Cameron, Conkling, Ch—

From the Grand Rapids Eagle.

Says the Cincinnati Times: "The old Senatorial group will be prepared to receive visitors after the 4th of March. Zach Chandler will be missed." Were this a Senatorial election year in Michigan "Zach" would be there.

From the Stanton Herald.

In case the rumor of Christiancy's resignation is correct, the Legislature of Michigan will be certain to elect Zachariah Chandler to fill the vacancy. This will be done in obedience to the emphatic sentiment of the Republican voters of the State.

From the Allegan Journal.

Just give the Michigan Legislature a chance to elect a Senator in Christiancy's place and you will see them set Zach Chandler down into that seat with an alacrity that will astonish the old veteran himself.

From the Battle Creek Journal (National.)

It is now stated, as if by reliable authority, that Senator Christiancy will resign his seat in the Senate and accept the mission to Peru, on account of his health. Of course, this makes the way open for the return of ex Secretary Chandler of the Senate, as there is no doubt that the present Legislature would elect him, in case of a vacancy. There would be an eminent fitness in the appointment of Judge Christiancy to a judicial position, and many have expected that one would be tendered him. The qestion of health, however, seems to have determined his choice in another direction.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—THIRD SESSION.

THE House bill to facilitate the refunding of the National debt was reported, without amendment, from the Committee of Finance, to the Senate, on the 21st. A bill was introduced and referred to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases in the United States, and to establish a Bureau of Public Health. The Naval Appropriation bill was considered and amended. A bill was introduced and referred in the House to authorize the coinage of gold metric dollars, five dollars and fractions of dollars. The Potter resolution directing an investigation into the cipher dispatches, and appropriating $30,000 to defray the expenses of such inquiry, was taken up and debated. Messrs. Potter Hale and Hewitt speaking in favor of and Mr. Butler in opposition to, the resolution, after which it was adopted, without division. The Post-Route bill was reported and passed.

THE House bill to facilitate the refunding of the National debt was passed by a unanimous vote, in the Senate, on the 23d. A bill was introduced, and referred to the pension and jurisdictions, within the United States, of notes, bonds and other securities of foreign Governments. A bill was passed to declare certain lands granted the Pacific Railroad Companies by the acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, subject to taxation by the States or Territories in which they may be located. The Naval Appropriation bill was further discussed and passed. The Senate amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill were non-concurred in by the House. A bill was introduced and referred, directing the Secretary of the Treasury, in certain cases, A stormy debate was had on a Southern bill. Eulogies were pronounced and resolutions were adopted in honor of the memory of the late Beverly L. Douglas, of Virginia.

A FAVORABLE report was made in the Senate, on the 23d, on the House bill to promote the extension of the blind. A Conference Committee was appointed on the Indian Appropriation bill. The Conference report on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was agreed to, and the bill was passed. Bills were passed—to amend the Patent laws; House bills with amendments, making appropriations to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of Sec. 24 of the Revised Statutes in regard to the expenses of transporting coin and bullion and for miscellaneous expenses of the House. In the House the Conference report on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was agreed to. The Army and Post-Office Appropriation bills and a bill for taking the Federal census were reported. A bill was introduced to regulate commerce between the United States and Canada, and to provide for reciprocal navigation. The bills to apply the proceeds of the sale of public lands to the education of the people, was debated at considerable length in Committee of the Whole.

IN the Senate, on the 24th, the memorial of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony, and other officers of the National Woman's Suffrage Association, was presented, praying for the passage of a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the States from disfranchising persons on account of sex. Mr. Edmunds moved to take up his resolution, declaring the validity of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution, and after several dilatory motions were made, and acted upon, a motion to adjourn was agreed to—25 to 22. Adjourned to the 27th. The Senate concurred in the bill appropriating $60,000 for the transportation of coin and bullion, and $40,000 for the miscellaneous expenses of the House, were concurred in by the House. The Senate bill granting a penalty for embezzlement on the part of officers in the Internal-Revenue Service was passed. Several private bills were also passed. In Committee of the Whole, Mr. Bragg objected to almost all the Private Calendar.

SENATE not in session on the 25th.

The Postoffice Appropriation bill (appropriating $34,240,000, a decrease of about $2,750,000 from the estimates, and an increase of $1,000,000 over the appropriation of last year) was considered in the House, in Committee of the Whole, and several amendments, increasing the appropriation in certain cases, were agreed to.

DOMESTIC.

SEC'Y SHERMAN has announced that Government interest will henceforth be paid at all Sub-Treasuries in coin or currency, at the option of the payee, and holders of bonds presenting and paying gold only at New York will be abandoned.

A REPORT was received in Washington, on the 21st, from the Indian agent at the Cheyenne Agency, to the effect that information had been received at the Agency that Sitting Bull and his people had recrossed the Canadian line into the United States, and that they were exceedingly anxious to return to this country and be under the care and supervision of the Indian Bureau and be distributed in the Indian country, as are other tribes. It was reported that some 5,000 lodges, or nearly 25,000 people, were with Sitting Bull.

THE bill to facilitate the refunding of the National debt, which was passed by the United States Senate by the New York Legislature, on the 21st, and referred to the appropriate committee, within the United States, of notes, bonds and other securities of foreign Governments. A bill was passed to declare certain lands granted the Pacific Railroad Companies by the acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, subject to taxation by the States or Territories in which they may be located. The Naval Appropriation bill was further discussed and passed. The Senate amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill were non-concurred in by the House. A bill was introduced and referred, providing for the issue of new bonds, to be called the Refunding act; and the money so received shall be applied to the payment of the 5-20 bonds in the mode prescribed by said act; and to the bonds hereinafter authorized, and rules said regulations in conformity with this act.

AT Scranton, Pa., on the 22d, 6 Mrs. David Jones' new-born child were burned to death by the explosion of a kerosene lamp.

THE Judson Bank, at Ogdensburg, N. Y., suspended on the 23d. With moderation on the part of the creditors, the bank expected to pay in full.

ON the 22d, the United States troops came up with the Cheyennes who escaped from Fort Robinson, some days before, and attacked them with great vigor. Twenty-three of the Indians were killed, nine were taken prisoners and seventy-one escaped. Capt. Wessells was slightly wounded.

SEC'Y SHERMAN issued a further call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds, on the 24th. The amount is $20,000,000, and interest on principal are payable on the 24th of next April.

THE Comptroller of the Currency has called for a report of the condition of the National Banks at the close of business on the 1st of January, 1879.

PRESIDENT HAYES has signed the new Pension Arrears bill.

THE lately-published thrilling account of the death of a Fountain County (Ind.) man, by a falling aerolite, is declared to be a miserable canard, on the authority of Prof. Cox, State Geologist of Indiana.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

ON the 21st, both houses of the Illinois Legislature balloted for United States Senator, with the following results: Senate—Logan, 26; Black, 24; McAuliffe, 1, and John A. Logan was declared duly elected on the part of the Senate. In the House the vote stood: Logan, 80; Black, 60; Campbell, 10; McAuliffe, 3, and Mr. Logan was declared duly elected on the part of the House.

DAN W. VOORHEES was re-elected United States Senator for the long and short terms, by the Indiana Legislature, on the 21st. The vote was as follows: Short term, Senator Voorhees, 36; Orth, 22; Buchanan, 1. House: Voorhees, 57; Orth, 37; Buchanan, 2; Shakelford, 1. Long term, Senator Voorhees, 36; Harrison, 22; Buchanan, 1. House: Voorhees, 57; Harrison, 38; Buchanan, 2.

THE North Carolina Legislature, on the 21st, elected Gov. Z. B. Vance United States Senator. The Florida Legislature, on the same day, elected Hon. Wilkinson Call to succeed Conover. The Missouri Legislature elected Col. George G. Vest for the long term and Gen. James Shields for the short term.

ROSCOE CONKLING was re-elected United States Senator by the New York Legislature, on the 21st. The Pennsylvania Legislature re-elected J. Donald Cameron, and the Connecticut Legislature elected Orville H. Platt.

THE Wisconsin Legislature, on the 20th, elected Hon. Matthew Carpenter United States Senator to succeed Senator Howe.

AT JACKSONVILLE, Fla., on the 23d, the Judge of the United States Court sentenced the Brevard County Canvassing Board, convicted of making a false return of the late election, to imprisonment in the Penitentiary at Albany, N. THE TELLER INVESTIGATION AT NEW ORLEANS.

IN LOUISIANA.

Before the representatives appointed by the committee, N. J. Cumming, member of the Legislature for Natchitoches, testified. The general tenor of the testimony of witnesses on the Republican side is to the effect that there was conspiracy on the part of the Democrats to break up negro meetings for political effect; such testimony is unqualifiedly false; there was no organized band such as Blount described; action against Blount and others was taken for protection, they having threatened to get the negroes together and have the fight; it was reported that Blount had ten or twelve armed negroes in his house; after consultation concluded it would not be safe to allow him to remain there; witness was acting Chief of Police, the affair was quietly managed; no violence or bloodshed was contemplated; it was solely for the purpose of preserving the peace that we determined to arrest him; no violent threats were made or stirred up; himself and wife; witness considered Beedle witness to the most bloodthirsty men he ever saw; when they were acting with the Democrats, they proposed to kill the Republican leaders. The testimony of witness throughout was contradictory to Republican witnesses, except as to Blount, Beedle, and others being ashteen to leave the parish, but will also said that was not political. He declined to express an opinion as to whether it would be safe for negroes to return, but thought it was great injustice to the white people of the parish.

THE POTTER COMMITTEE.

The Potter Committee reassembled, on the 23d. Mr. Butler denied the truthfulness of the report sent out the previous day, in substance, that the cipher dispatches were in his possession at last summer. If he made any such statement, he was drunk or insane. Mr. Blaine's said he had good reason to believe that the dispatches were copied before they came into Mr. Butler's hands.

Zebina Eastman, formerly Private Secretary to Vice-President Ferry, remembered the dispatches ordered from Louisville. It was suppressed without objection; did not know what became of them.

The committee went into executive session, after which Mr. Butler offered the following resolution, which was unanimously agreed to:

Resolved, That the committee receive from Mr. Butler the cipher dispatches which he shall produce to them, and that the clerk be directed, in connection with some person whom Mr Butler may designate, to make a complete inventory of the dispatches so received in duplicate and certify to the same, one copy to be preserved for the use of the committee and one given to Mr. Butler; that all cipher dispatches so received shall be printed for the committee; that unless hereafter otherwise ordered before any originals or copies are given out for publication they shall be submitted to the committee; that the chairman of the committee who shall be sworn to make a faithful transcription of and decipher the same according to his best knowledge, skill and ability, and that no person be allowed to be present during the deciphering by the chairman, except the persons employed in deciphering and the expert or supposed translation without a previous agreement of the committee; that Messrs. Beach and Hale be and they are hereby appointed to confer with Mr. Butler as to the manner of deciphering the dispatches and that the said Beach and Hale report to the committee any progress they may make in the premises.

Mr. Butler then read a statement, which was tabled, reciting that Mr. Hewitt had, in the House, declared that there was an organized conspiracy to find his witnesses charging him with a knowledge of such conspiracy, and also that Mr. Hewitt and Mr. Tilden be notified of the investigation ordered by the committee, and that they be allowed to be represented by counsel in the same manner and under the same conditions as the persons arraigned under the ordinary resolution constituting the committee.

Mr. Hewitt said that Mr. Murphy, whom he examined at some length regarding the affidavit alleged to have been made by Mr. Beedle, and that Mr. Maddox, who instructed him to report "not to publish," and who had been employed as counsel on Republican witnesses. It was a mistake, said he, to suppose that Mr. Murphy was in the employ of the Democratic committee. Mr. Murphy's affidavit was handed in to the effect that he had not a copy of the affidavit and did not know that Beedle had made such affidavit, and that Maddox. The witness then stated how, when acting as counsel for Republican witnesses, he had been informed twelve or thirteen subpœnas with the request that he serve them. Being busy himself, he had given them to Maddox; in all three cases they were witnesses who were Republicans

A MERMAN.—On Tuesday morning, the 28th, about two o'clock, a very brilliant meteor passed over this region from a south westerly to a north easterly direction. It shed a light which awakened people from their sleep by its intensity. In appearance it can only be described as a large ball of fire. When apparently over the village it seemed to burst, making a noise not unlike sharp thunder, yet more terrible.

Mr. Cook, who lives about eight miles northeast of this place, was lying in his bed awake at the time when the intense light startled him, and he sprang from his bed to see a monstrous ball of fire fall and spread itself, then some intangible vapory substance, over the sidehill not forty rods from the house. It seemed to linger for some time and disappeared gradually. While it remained in sight, he says, like fire-brands spread over the snow.

Daniel Monroe, of South Arm, was walking along the road when it appeared, and as the terrible spectacle appeared, he fell back into the snow with fright, and so seriously did it affect him that his mental faculties were so affected for some time thereafter. He states that when it burst, the noise resembled fire crackers under a barrel, only a thousand times louder.

The phenomena produced its horrific effects. In one of the Townships of this county, a tin wedding was in progress. When the fiery apparition came for examination his Honorable Board of Supervisors, dated May 6th, 1878, upon the 2, 3 and 4 of the entitlement against the 5 Township of [illegible] North, Range 7 West, in the county of Charlevoix, with a view to the consolidation of said [illegible] and to hear all persons interested in said matter at the office of the Township Clerk, in said Township of [illegible] on the 4th day of March, 1878, at 10 o'clock A. M. of said day, when and where any person interested may appear and be heard concerning said [illegible] and the [illegible] thereof.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered Liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is fearful, sucking life actually in the very meridian of a pleasant existence. Every ailment and infirmity it ought to be. There is no good reason for this. If you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggists, Geo. H. Cheesman, and your friends and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this marvelous have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

SHALL THE INDIAN BUREAU BE TRANSFERRED?

The Joint Congressional Committee Equally Divided on the Question—Report of Those Members Favoring the Proposed Change.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.

The Joint Congressional Committee appointed to consider the advisability of transferring the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department, yesterday morning voted on the subject, with the following result: Against transfer, Senators Saunders, and Allegheny, and Representatives Stewart and Voorhees—4. In favor of the transfer, Senator McCreery and Representatives Scales, Hooker and Boone—4. After the vote, a controversy arose as to which of the two reports should be given precedence in the presentation to Congress. The opponents of the transfer claim that its advocates, failing to obtain a majority, must consider theirs the minority report, as an amendment offered to an existing law falls upon a tie vote. Senator Saunders and others favored authorizing the President at his discretion to turn over to the War Department the control of any tribe or tribes that might be in rebellion, or giving trouble, or such tribes as the President might think best at this time, and that he was in favor of the Sioux being transferred at once, with the reservation that transfer should not affect the school or farming interests, etc.

The report of the four members who favor the transfer has just been completed by Representative Scales, and will be submitted to the House the first opportunity. The principal features of the document are as follows:

The history of our management of Indian affairs and our treatment of the Indians is one of shame and mortification to all right-thinking and liberal-minded men. A proper solution of the "Indian problem" is pressing itself more strongly upon the public attention every year, demanding the imperative attention of Congress, and cannot, with either safety to the Indians or honor to the Government, be longer deferred. The failure on the part of our Government to discharge its duty to the Indians is not confined to the last few years. Our wrongful treatment of them is coequal with our existence, though not to the same extent in the earlier and purer days as at present. During all the years vast complaints have been made of violated policies, broken promises, and lack of efficient and responsible management. Indeed the system of the management of the Indian affairs we have pursued (if we have had a system at all) has been unequal to the demands of our duty. Nor has it met the expectations of its instigators and advocates, and in such an extent have these wrongs been multiplied, and to such extent have frauds and peculation crept into the management of Indian affairs, and to such a shameful issue these frauds become that indignant public opinion will not longer look on with indifference and unconcern, but demands that these matters be looked into, and the wrongs, so far as possible, be righted, and that a policy be adopted in accordance with the dignity and character of our Government, and secure to the Indians the just and ample justice to a suffering and outraged people.

That these wrongs and abuses do now exist, and to a fearful extent, we think no one at all acquainted with the facts will deny. Of proof upon this point were wanting or demanded, we have but to refer to the statements of all who have investigated the question, and those familiar with our present management, and to those who are to-day strenuous advocates of the present system, and who ask for no modification, and who cease to believe in its ultimate success.

To go back into the history of this question, it will be found that our system of Indian management has always been, virtually and in effect, the system now in vogue. Even while it was nominally under the War Department, prior to 1849, the system was very much the same as now. We are aware that the general impression is, that before that time a different system prevailed, and the change to that year, to the Interior Department, was a radical change in the system; but such is not the case, and while it is true that Superintendents and Agents, being few in number, made reports to the War Office; it is also true that neither the Secretary of War nor any officer in the War Department had anything to do with the appointment of these officers, nor was the War Office charged with the duty of supervising them, or controlling them in any manner up to 1834. While, by this act of 1834, the Secretary of War was given a sort of general superintendence of the conduct of Agents and Sub-Agents (appointed by the President), and while by that act the President was authorized to select military men to discharge the duties of Indian Agents, it is further true that a large majority of the Agents selected were taken from civil life, and much of the same machinery was employed in the conduct of Indian affairs as now.

We claim that the Indian management has never been satisfactorily at least as at the present time. Therefore, whatever failure or wrongs have characterized our management in the past are justly chargeable to our present system, and whatever of success has attended that management should be credited to that system. Year after year large amounts of money have been appropriated with a view of civilizing these people, and yet failure is written upon every page of the history of these efforts in this direction. The inauguration of the peace policy in 1869 by President Grant in the opinion of the undersigned, was a natural admission that the Indian Bureau was inadequate to the proper conduct of Indian affairs, and was compelled, therefore, to delegate much of its authority to other hands. From the show of progress made in civilizing, educating and Christianizing the Indians, to which your committee had their attention called while among them last fall, there is no room to doubt that we should try some method of dealing with this question different from that now in vogue. Owing, on the account of the rapid strides of the Indians in the way of civilized life, and their rapid march to the standard of civilization, are not borne out by facts. Stupendous irregularities and great frauds have crept into every branch of the Indian Service. No one is found with the hardihood to deny that the history of such frauds is visible on every page of Indian management for the last score or more of years. Indeed, so flagrant are the frauds and so defiant have their perpetrators become, that it appears a notorious fact that a ring exists, composed of contractors, employes of the bureau and wealthy and influential persons outside, whose object is to swindle and defraud both the Government and the Indians. The opinion entertained by the undersigned is that these frauds will forever exist, even with the most vigilant, scrupulous honesty which can be brought into the management of the Indian Bureau, because we believe the method or system of that department is inadequate to prevent fraud, however honest the head of the office may be, and for the reason that the system of accountability in the department is not close enough to detect corruption.

We are asked the very pertinent question whether or not the same abuses and frauds would be practiced if the management should be transferred to the War Department. We think not, for a fair and very plain and obvious reason, to-wit: Whatever else may be said of our army officers, they are, as a class, men of high honor and strict integrity. The training has impressed these high qualities upon them, and their association requires their constant observance. Every officer in the army is a check upon every other officer, and such is the system of accountability in the army that it is nearly if not quite impossible for an officer to act dishonestly without being detected, and upon being detected, punishment follows swiftly and surely. With civil Agents this is not the case. They are appointed generally as partisans and for a limited time, subject at any time to removal, paid small salaries, and can only hope to hold their position a few years at the most, and hence have not the same inducements to act honestly and fairly that an army officer has. We do not undertake to say that the War Department has such perfect management that abuses do not occur in its administration also, but we think it compares favorably with any other department, and that fewer instances of dishonest practices have been laid to its charge than to almost any other branch of the public service.

Next to the question of absolute justice to the Indians, and hence that of the comparative cost of the two systems, and we are decidedly of the opinion that a large amount of money can and will be saved, if the transfer be made. If, the committee say, it be true that army officers can perform the duties of Indian Agents as faithfully, diligently and honestly as civil servants, and are doing; and if the War Department can purchase as cheaply as the Interior Department; and if the means of transportation in the War Department are much superior; and if the systems of inspection are equal; and if army officers are not so apt to become victims of temptation; and if we can secure more faithful and honest administration through such army officers, and thereby avoid some, if not all, the Indian wars—we say, if these, or any number of these, propositions be true, then who can say that we shall not save millions of dollars in our Indian management if this transfer is made, and at the same time secure justice to the Indians, the lack of which has caused so much trouble?

The report concludes:

We believe the interest of the Government and the good of the Indian will be best promoted by transferring the management of Indian affairs to the War Department, leaving it discretionary with the Secretary of War to appoint civil Agents to those agencies which, in his judgment, the interest of the concerned will be best secured by such Agents, and clothing the army, where the interests of the service require it.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—There are two Congregational Churches in St. Petersburg, Russia, and neighborhood, both of which have English Congregational ministers as pastors.

—The dissenting ministers of Rochester and Chatham, Eng., have resolved to officiate at no weddings on Sunday, nor will they conduct funerals on the Lord's-Day unless there is a medical man's certificate that immediate interment is necessary on sanitary grounds.

—The Presbyterian Board of Missions has been opened with 350 colleges of the United States and Dominion of Canada, and 1,000 letters have been exchanged by the students in 100 of these institutions. The Secretary of the Conference has visited twenty-five colleges in New England, the Middle States, Virginia and Minnesota, carrying to them the suggestions of the Conference. The Secretary has also met not less than 200 students, in eight different State Conventions of the Young Men's Christian Association, and conferred with them about the interests of the work. An investigation by the Secretary has led to the following estimate, namely: Among the 60,000 students, about 25,000 are professing Christians, and less than 8,000 are engaged even nominally in any kind of active work. As a result of the work done, about 1,000 conversions are reported. During next May, another College Conference will be held in Baltimore.—N. Y. Evening Post.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—Electric carriage lamps a French inventor proposes to produce, so that ordinary carriages drawn by horses will be illuminated by electricity supplied by the rotary motion of their wheels, locomotives while in motion will light up the trains they draw, and steamships supply themselves with powerful lights.

—The Darwinian maxim that the heaviest and largest seeds need help to produce the finest plants has found support in the observations and tests made by Mr. A. S. Wilson on turnip seeds. Large seeds gave a produce of two pounds seven ounces per seed, against two pounds one and one-fourth ounce in the case of small seeds.

—California cactus is one of the newest articles from which paper is made, and a process has been patented in Germany by a Mr. Nordlinger, of Stuttgart, for rendering the fiber of the hop plant sufficiently tractable for this purpose. The stems and other parts are boiled in water and soap for three-quarters of an hour, thoroughly washed, and then again boiled in very much diluted acetic acid. The fibers are then washed, dried and combed, and are ready for working.

—Several eminent veterinarians assure us that pulmonary consumption is quite a common disease among cattle, and that it may be transmitted from one animal to another by taking the germs with the food. We are also told that the flesh and milk of animals thus affected may contain the germs which are readily transmitted to human beings partaking of their milk or flesh; and that ordinary cooking is not sufficient to destroy those germs. With the trichinæ in pork and germs of consumption in beef and mutton, it is a marvel that the human race has not long since perished. Still a few do live to reach old age in spite of their numerous parasitic enemies.

—It is estimated by chemists who have carefully investigated the subject, that thousands of barrels of what is known as terra alba, or white earth, are every year mixed in various forms and by ingenious methods with commercial sugars and other white substances—the use of the article tending, of course, to produce stone, kidney complaints and various diseases of the stomach. It is also used in confectionery very extensively, and various poisonous substances are employed, in addition, for coloring confectionery. Regularly-established mills are now in operation, grinding gypsum known as Shriden's Drive, on a range of hills immediately to the west of Fort Leavenworth. Within these mounds were traces of stonework, both rustic and nearly perfect as that of the present day. Some days ago a party went to the mounds, and found a sort of book of records, written, or translated rather, upon pieces of bark, and pieced together like the leaves of a book, and tied with smaller pieces of bark. Among the expiering party was a gentleman from Boston, who had made the study of Mexico a study, and who, upon examination of the records found in the mounds, found a similarity between them and the records and the ancient language of Mexico during the time of the Montezumas. The record is a history, a chronicle of events. No dates are given, but from historical analogy it is to be inferred that it must have been about 1420, during the reign of the Montezumas in Mexico, when the Emperors of that name had it all their own way, in not only their own section of the country, but up this way as well. It records give the details of a great battle, probably on the very spot where the records were found, and a siege of such. According to the records, the battle raged for three days, and the ground was strewn with slain, and after the conflict was over the victors, with the prisoners they had taken, reversed their steps and went back to Mexico, where the captives were to be offered upon the altars as a sacrifice to their god of war. The records were evidently written by the victors, and placed by them in the mounds were they were found. The records consist of ten large pieces of bark, flattened out about ten or twelve inches in size, and bound tight together by thongs of bark cut into long strips and pressed. They have been sent to Boston, and are to be placed in the State Historical Museum there.—Leavenworth (Kan.) Times.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—Linseed oil for cracked hands is far better than any sticking salve. Apply the oil as convenient; it will make the hands white and soft as silk; it is good for farmers' girls to use, to remove tan and callosses, and keeps their hands white and soft while helping ma every day, outdoors and in, always up or down.—Exchange.

—A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune states that the hundreds of farmers who, during the flush times, a few years since, rushed on and their farms and moved into the city, are now returning to the country, many of them sadder and wiser men. Their sons and daughters have, no doubt, during their brief stay in town had better opportunities for obtaining a polished education, but not one that will be useful in getting a living upon a farm.

—The number of square feet in an acre is 43,560. In order to have this area the piece of land must be of such a length and breadth that the two multiplied together will produce the above number. Thus, an acre of land might be 43,560 feet long by one foot broad; 21,780 feet long by two feet broad; 14,520 by three feet broad, and so on. If the acre of land is to be exactly square, each side must be as nearly as possible 208 feet 9½ inches. The nearest you can come to an exactly square piece with an even number of feet in the side, is to make it 220 feet long by 198 broad.

—Labor-Saving Soap.—To two bars of common hard soap, or two quarts of lye soap (made of wood ashes), take two gallons of water, one pound and one-half pound of sal soda, and one-half pound of rosin; pulverize the rosin and dissolve it in the water, with a gentle heat, then put in the soda, and when it is dissolved, add the soap; slice up the bars, as it will dissolve sooner; simmer for half an hour, and be careful not to let it boil too fast, as it will run over everything, and cold water only makes it worse. This is the best soap ever used to take out stains; always soak tablecloths in boiling water before putting them in the wash, then use this soap and you will not fail to have the pride of a good housekeeper, white clothes.—Exchange.

—A successful New York market gardener states that he uses cotton cloth, at a cost of one-eighth that of glass, for more than three-fourths of his hot beds, and that, although not as good for the earliest beds, it is preferred for all later ones. It is prepared by making the cloth into strips of two inches wider and longer than the frame, hemmed and provided with small curtain rings fifteen inches apart around the border, stoutly sewed on; and by hooking over nails the cloth is drawn air-tight over the frame. A quart of linseed oil, one ounce of pulverized sugar of lead and four ounces of patent dryer are heated, dissolved and thoroughly mixed with a pint of rich kettle, and one coat applied while hot to the upper side of the cloth. This renders the fabric nearly transparent.

—An Eastern lady gives the following recipe for Boston baked beans: "We pick, wash and put to soak my kind of beans we have on hand, some on Saturday morning. When the lady of the forenoon is getting nearly finished we bring the beans to a boil, in a good deal of water, allowing them to boil gently, until, by lifting some of the beans upon a skimmer and blowing upon them, the skin cracks. We then skim them into a 'bean pot' made for baking beans in, put in a small tablespoonful of molasses and a pinch of salt, and, to a pint dipperful of beans before soaking, a piece of salt pork about four inches square. Then fill up with cold water, cover up and bake in a hot oven until evening. Let them remain in the oven over night and be brought to a proper degree of heat next morning for breakfast. Care should be taken that the water does not boil out while baking. By this method the beans will come from the oven to the table soft, rich, delicious—in that wonderful state some writer speaks of as being just where each one maintains its own individuality, but upon the very point of being united to its neighbor."

Keep Off the Farm.

A review of the statistics for the past ten years will show the growing importance of our agriculture, and will also show those professional and well-meaning philantiropists, who desire that everybody out of employment should resort to tilling the soil, that until there is a better market we have farmers enough. The vast untouched acres of the West do not offer a solution of the question as to how to live, to the present unemployed, by any means. A very fertile cause of our present stagnation of business is the lack of a suitable condition of labor. Men have crowded into certain callings until they are overflowing. Those cities do not want any more clerks, any more lawyers, any more doctors, or any more gamblers. Those and like callings have been accredited that a portion of those who follow them find themselves upon the very verge of starvation, and, besides not producing anything, are by reason of poverty unable to consume much of anything. They go hungry while there is plenty to eat, and freeze while there are plenty of garments to wear. This is the condition of thousands. And the result is that the manufacturer and producer find a limited demand for products for which there should be a good demand, and he, especially the manufacturer, finds it necessary to limit his productions, and in so doing turns out of employment another army to starve and freeze in a land running with milk and honey. To all these thousands of unemployed the philanthropist says: "Go to farming." That is, he would throw masters still further out of gear and labor by overcrowding a calling which even now produces more than there is a market to absorb at remunerative prices. Far better to let that calling remain as it is until those who have been trained in it, and to whom it legitimately belongs, can make it remunerative to the present dependents.

Just a casual review of the last few years will, we think, be sufficient to settle this point. Take, for instance, the values of live animals and breadstuffs for the ten years just past, the exportation of which has so largely increased during the time. In 1868 the value of exports of live animals was $735,325, and in 1878 it was $5,844,-653, an increase of $5,111,258. In 1868 the value of breadstuffs was $68,-993,407, and in 1878 it was $181,774,-507; an increase of $112,795,510. We also find, in 1868 the value was $406,-512, and in 1878 it was $1,386,969, an increase of $980,457. In 1868 this shows how rapidly our production is increasing, and yet in the very face of this increase the demand for labor on the Mount: "Which of you, by taking thought, can add one cubit unto his stature?" The product of labor on a certain memorable occasion was admirable in this respect. When his favorite child was ill he fasted and lay all night upon the earth. And finally that fasting was accompanied by earnest prayer to the Great Disposer of all things. But when the babe died he arose, washed himself, changed his garments, commanded meat to be set before him, and went into the house of the Lord. Mark his words, "Where fore should I fast? Can I bring him back again?" Let us remember those practical words when we are required to repine over the inevitable. "Be careful for nothing," your anxiety is profitless. Nor is that all. There is a positive as well as a negative side to the evil.

Anxiety does much harm. We talk about fretting, but what does the word mean? Originally it meant to fray, to wear out. Our forefathers spoke of a garment which had become threadbare and full of holes as fretted. And be sure of it, to fret and worry about things is to wear the mind out. People speak sometimes of men being worked to death. Be skeptical about that; such suicides are extremely rare. It is not work, but worry that kills. Activity injures none, anxiety hurts thousands. Nothing incapacitates us for duty more than care; it saps our energies and undermines our strength. Sir Walter Scott was a prodigious worker and his industry never harmed him, but when that great calamity came by which he not only lost his property but was involved in fearful pecuniary liabilities, his anxiety brought on paralysis, and premature death followed.—T. R. Stevenson.

Chinese Customs.

In China the left hand is the seat of honor, and a Chinese guest in a European's house may often be observed to be uneasy at finding himself, as he imagines, slighted by being placed on the right hand of his host. They are painfully scrupulous about the matter at seating hosts and guests. To a European it is most irksome to have to go through the pantomime of bows and grimaces which always precede the disposition of guests and host in a Chinese reception-room, and it not infrequently ends in the impetuous Aryan's assuming the seat closest at hand, irrespective of all ceremonial rules, whilst the Turanian sits down in despair and disgust at having to entertain such a hopeless savage. Then, in the matter of costume, a Chinaman, as is well known, is notable for the length and capacity of his skirts, whilst his wife and daughters wear—and not unfrequently display—the breeches. Silk and satin are his favorite materials for clothes, and the handsomer the pattern, and more heavy and showy the embroidery, the better pleased he considers himself. A necklace of beads forms an indispensable adjunct to the full dress of a Mandarin, and one may be rarely out of his hand either when at home or abroad. On entering a room on receiving a visitor, a Chinaman's first care is to put on his cap, and to take it off, and where a friend in Europe might say, "Keep on your hat, my boy," in China the entreaty would be, "Oblige me by dispensing with your hat." In Europe a host begs his guest to take a seat, and sets the action to the word by sitting down himself. In China it would be regarded as the height of rudeness to sit down before every guest is well seated. In Europe friends grasp each other by the hand by way of greeting, whereas a Chinese clasps his own hands together and shakes them at his visitor. In the matter of visiting-cards the same exceedingly curious difference obtains. A Chinaman uses a small card only when on familiar terms with the person visited, and then it is from five to six times larger than what Europeans are in the habit of employing. When a little more ceremony is requisite, the card is folded in two, and on very formal occasions it grows into a perfect pamphlet of several sheets, which, by-the-way, it is considered correct to return to the guest at banquets or dinners the guest brings his card of invitation with him (also a many-paged curiosity), and presents it with a solemn bow, to the host before assuming his seat at the table. Scarlet is the mourning color, and instead of a leaved pamphlet), and restores it, with a solemn bow, to the host before assuming his seat at the table. Scarlet is the mourning color, and instead of using pearl-gray paper is used according to the degree of relationship in which the entire card is colored—not, as with us, the edge alone. Here we are reminded that the hundreds of millions of Chinese and Western Ideas, plain white being regarded as the color de rigueur for mourning costume, not to be confounded with that worn by widow or grand-parent, or a woman lamenting the loss of her husband—in both of which cases the code prescribes the deepest mourning—is expected to be clad in white from head to foot; and custom demands that the hat, boots, and everything about her, even down to the end of silk cord even down to the end of silk cord which is plaited into the queue, shall be of the prescribed color.—Harper's Weekly.

An Exposition of the Mysteries of the Gyroscope.

The discovery of a new law of motion at this time of day might be considered somewhat apocryphal, and that a clear solution of the mysteries of the gyroscope would be within the grasp of the ordinary man of letters. And yet one of our citizens of Irish birth, Mr. McCarroll, appears to have demonstrated the one and to have accomplished the other, the proofs of which, so far as we are able to judge from a hasty glance, lie before us. Mr. McCarroll avers that all bodies moving in right lines change their direction from the centre of gravity, and, consequently, their weight, at every moment; and that, when moving in curves, whether concentric with the centre of the earth or otherwise, the tangential force, antagonizing with that of gravity, serves to change their weight also. How he says it does so in a fourth law of motion, that "A body is of uniform weight when at rest only."

In relation to the mysterious problem of the gyroscope—which has, we believe, never been satisfactorily solved previously—his solution is seemingly quite clear. In fact, he appears to demonstrate that a vertical wheel in motion does not press upon the same points of its bearings that it does when it is at rest, from the fact, as he alleges, that all the particles of matter in the periphery on one side of the wheel have a tendency to fly off at various angles in the line of the earth's gravity, and one of them directly in that line; while all the particles in the other half of the periphery have a tendency to fly off in a contrary direction, establishes an unequal distribution of force upon the axis, and a minus and plus side of the wheel; as on the one side we have the earth's gravity, plus the tangential force of the wheel, and on the other its gravity minus that force. This once admitted, the motion of the Sorizontal ring on which the vertical wheel revolves is apparent at once; for the ring, being free to obey any impulse given it in its own plane, simply retires before the plus side of the wheel and in a direction contrary to the revolution of the wheel itself. In explanation of the mysterious manner in which the whole weight of the gyroscope is sustained on one side of the upright pivot upon which the small projection from the horizontal ring rests freely, Mr. McCarroll says that when the vertical wheel is made to rotate so rapidly that the tangential force is in excess of that of gravitation in the whole mass, both ring and wheel will remain suspended without any material support on one side of the upright, and be carried round the pivot upon which the projection from the ring rests, revolving more rapidly as the tangential force of the wheel decreases and is more readily lent out of its place, until, failing below the force exercised upon the whole mass by the gravity of the earth, both ring and wheel begin to gradually describe downward the arc of a circle vertical to a line tangent to the earth's surface, with the pivot for its center, and the axis of the wheel, together with the projection of the ring, for its radius, until, at last, the exhausted mass tumbles to the ground.—*N. Boy Wanted.

A few mornings since, a lady on Clifford street answered the bell, to find a bulky boy, with an innocent face and a basket, standing on the outside of the steps. He explained that he wanted to see her husband, and she answered that her husband was not in the office.

"I'm the boy who sweeps out all the offices where he is," said the boy, as he backed down the steps, "and this morning I found a letter in the big scrapsack."

"Well, you can leave it," she replied.

"—I guess I won't both better," he said half-whispered, as he showed the small half-envelope.

"Boy—that is—boy, let me see that letter!" she said, as she advanced and extended her hand.

"Oh, 'twouldn't be 'zactly right, ma'am 'cause I know he'd gin me fifty cents."

"See here, boy," she said, as she felt for the dollar-bill left to buy collars and ties, "you take this, give me the letter and don't say a word to Mr. —— about finding it."

"I don't believe it's much of a letter," he remarked.

"Never mind—hand it over—here's your money!"

"Mebbe there hain't a word of writing in it, ma'am."

Here—give me the letter—now go!"

She took it and entered the house, and the boy with peach-colored ears flew down the street like a cannibal going to dinner.

In about forty seconds the woman came out, looked up and down the street, and the expression around her mouth was not happy and peaceful. The boy had seemed to doubt that there was any writing inside of the letter, but she was not quite prepared to tear it open and find a printed document. Whereupon she sat down and having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage," etc. She wants to hold another interview with the boy on Saturday morning. An Interesting Historical Discovery.

A short time ago a discovery of several mounds, evidently artificially constructed, and not the handiwork of Nature, was found to exist, known as Shriden's Drive, on a range of hills immediately to the west of Fort Leavenworth. Within these mounds were traces of stonework, both rustic and nearly perfect as that of the present day. Flounders' Eyes.

In the late summer of 1875 a little shoal of some fifteen quite transparent flounders were captured by Agassiz, on a quiet and brilliant morning, on the surface of the water, at the mouth of the harbor of Newport. They were swimming vertically, and violently rushing after the minute entomostraca which swarmed on the surface. They were at once transferred to shallow glass jars, in which they would remain at the bottom on their right sides, for hours unmovable. When disturbed they were rapid in their movements, frequently jumping out of the water. When at swimming vertically they usually moved obliquely, the tail being carried lower than the head. When one of these was looked at in profile, its right eye could be seen through the head, slightly in advance and a little above the left eye; owing to the great transparency of the body, the right eye was then nearly as useful as if placed on the left side. Gradually it rose, until in about six days it was well above the left eye; shortly after, wonderful to relate, it was seen to sink into the tissues at the base of the dorsal fin between this and the frontal; slowly it sank until the huge orbit became reduced to a mere circular opening a little by little became smaller and smaller, the eye pushed its way deeper into the tissues, until an additional opening was formed on the left side. At this stage there were three orbital openings, though of course but two eyes. The original or right-orbital opening soon became closed and the colored side had its two eyes.—Nature.

Anxiety.

Anxiety does no good. It never yet paid a debt, or healed a malady, or prevented an accident. "Surely they are disquieted in vain." Our Lord puts this pungently in His Sermon on the Mount: "Which of you, by taking thought, can add one cubit unto his stature?" The subject of anxiety on a certain memorable occasion was admirable in this respect. When his favorite child was ill he fasted and lay all night upon the earth. Asthmatic Bronchitis.

Of Nine Years' Standing, Cured by the Syrup.

I have been, for the last nine years, a great sufferer from Bronchitis and Asthma. At times so ill that for weeks I could not lie down in bed. After the administration of numerous remedies during the time, without any benefit, I finally tried Piso's Cure, and the result was that the terrible cough left me entirely from the first dose. I am now entirely free from the disease, and can recommend it to all who are afflicted with Asthma or Bronchitis, as I feel confident it will cure them. Mrs. ELIZA HEWELL.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Jan. 31, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

The temperance question is, perhaps the most difficult to deal with of all the social problems. Everything alcoholic, under the generic name of "Rum," appeals, in a greater or less degree, to the cravings of an overwhelming majority of our population; but a respectable minority are its bitter enemies. Hundreds of devoted men have dedicated their lives to warfare upon it. The Francis Murphys plead and declaim against it; the John B. Goughs hurl the myriad shafts of wit, sarcasm, eloquence, and impassioned denunciation against it; the Neal Dows, the Chapins and the Cutlers, legislate and organize against it. But, after all, it must be conceded that, idly their results, the struggles of all these would-be exterminators of alcohol irresistibly suggest the valorous efforts of the immortal Mr. Partington, to "sweep back the Atlantic Ocean with a broom." What is the matter? Intemperance being a freely acknowledged evil, can nothing more effective be done to mitigate it?

The solution of this question is about to be once more attempted here in New York, and in a somewhat novel way. The experimenters on this new line have watched the labors of the ancient promising total abstainers, and seem to have reached the conclusion that total abstinence may come as part of the millennium, but is almost too much to hope for at the present day. The result is that the certificate of incorporation of an association to be known by the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation" has this week been filed in the County Clerk's office. The purposes of the society, as stated in the certificate, are to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic beverages; to promote a knowledge of science and statistics relative to the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors; to disseminate among the people useful information regarding the principles here practical effect. The society intends to prepare and furnish to applicants either of three forms of pledges, to wit: A total abstinence pledge, operative for one year, and renewable thereafter at the will of the pledger; a moderation pledge, binding the person who takes it not to drink during business hours; and finally, a unique engagement meant to prevent the person taking the pledge from partaking of intoxicating liquors at the expense of another person, and from extending an invitation to any other person to drink at his expense. The society is also to exert its influence to induce retail liquor dealers to provide for teetotalers stimulating and nourishing beverages which contain no alcohol. Still another purpose of the society is to encourage the establishment of places of cheap recreation and amusement where no intoxicating liquors shall be sold. The society will begin operations at once, and its term of existence is fixed at twenty years. The incorporators of the society are well-known citizens, and it seems to me, if its affairs are wisely and vigorously managed, that it may render good practical service to the temperance cause.

Brother Talmadge, the athletic and agile exhorter of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, has a lively time of it all around. He preaches weekly red-hot sermons on the terrible "gilded vice" of New York, and most of the other prominent American cities (Brooklyn always excepted,) draws great crowds to laugh and applaud his variety performance; and then, when he pantingly pauses for echoes of commendation from his clerical brethren, hears only stern rebuke and denunciation, followed up by a rumor, now current, that the Brooklyn Presbytery will be called upon to discipline him for unseemly behavior. He labors frantically to wipe out his church debt, and only a little while after he has held a glorification meeting to celebrate the accomplishment of his task, is made a party to a lawsuit in which the testimony is uncomfortably strong that some of his subscriptions were obtained under false pretences, and that instead of his tabernacle being free from debt, it owes from sixty to seventy thousand dollars. Then, he is all the while subject to the merciless lampoons and caricatures of a rabid press, and in every way takes the penalties of great zeal in heroic doses. I believe, however, that there is not any truth in the vague report that Bro. Talmadge is going to escape these persecutions by resigning the ministry to accept a flattering star engagement with a combined circus and minstrel troupe.

A recently revived project to lay a street railroad in Broadway, from the Battery to Union Square, elicits from one of our prominent Sunday papers a column of reminiscence regarding the street, which the writer eulogizes after this wise: "There is probably not a more widely-known city road in the world than this. Even the street, which two thousand years ago, and probably a thousand years before that, was "called straight," in Damascus, is, at the end of all these centuries, almost unknown in comparison with the way which was called broad only "two hundred years ago, at one end of a little island, at the other of which might be found the aboriginal savage; and even of the streets of the great capitals of Europe there is not one the name of which is so familiar to all the dwellers within the bounds of civilization." The scheme of putting car tracks in so crowded and splendid a thoroughfare, is one that richly deserves defeat, and yet it seems already to have been of some use to the community, for almost immediately upon the renewed discussion of the subject, the stage lines have dropped their rate of fare to five cents, the lowest prominent figure it has ever touched. Before the way, the stages were the great public conveyances. The fare was then six cents. When the war began, their tariff shared in the general inflation, going up to ten cents, where it remained unchanged until within a year, when the elevated railroads made such a reduction in their receipts that they commenced to sell seventeen tickets for a dollar. This proved to be hardly reduction enough, and now with the added possibility of such formidable competition as a street road, the price has dropped to half past, and in future the great, white, lumbering institutions which were for so many years the pride of aristocratic New York, and the terror of timid pedestrians at the street crossings, will drop their exclusive airs and carry the common herd "at prices to suit the times." There are now running some 220 states on Broadway, and since the reduction they are so finally patronized that more will have to be added immediately. RADIX

GEN. GRANT.

The Ex-President as a Statesman and as a Gentleman.

Ex-Secretary Fish to N. Y. Tribune Reporter.

"Grant," said his former prime minister, "is underestimated in this country. He is not only a man of ability and firmness in character, and of unwavering patriotism, but I never knew any man more generous in his judgements, more open to conviction, and who loses so little his own opinion when it was shown to conflict with the public interests. There were times that you had to make him see that he was wrong, and do it by argument. But I have known him to change his views, on both personal and political things, when he had entertained them with the greatest stubbornness."

"Were your relations with the President always mild and even?"

"There were some things which the President saw differently from my view. Our intercourse, however, was never ruffled by ill temper. I found before I went into his Cabinet that he was a man who meant to serve the country and not himself alone, and I addressed myself at times to that latent element in his nature. I have said to him: 'General, you will not think to-morrow on this question as you do to-day—I don't believe you will.' He never repelled discussion, and listened to every point advanced, even in favor of men he did not like."

"I desire to ask you, Mr. Fish, if the current criticism on Gen. Grant's manners and gentility is founded on any thing real?"

The Foreign Secretary looked up as if glad to answer it, and said:

"Grant was innately a gentleman. If you were to place him in a certain circle of society people, such as exist in some of the exclusive parts of this city, it might be said there that he had too little the manner, and did not dance, nor flatter nor play the elegant creature as well as he might. That is the view some hold of a gentleman. But when you come to the natural graces of the heart, kindness and thoughtfulness, an ingenuous and open spirit, respect for good women and truthful men, there was about him all of that which marks the man. Many of his critics, more faithful ones, might have learned from him that imputation is no part of a gentleman. I repeat that he is underestimated. I have in my mind a range of nearly half a century of public men whom I knew; he has as much of any respect as any of them."

CLIPPINGS.

Judah P. Benjamin has found a place as Queen's counsel, in London, worth $150,000 a year. Virtuous in his own reward.

The Richmond Dispatch says it's a great gain to exchange Howe for Carpenter. Glad you like it. We strive to please.

A New York letter says the return of Gen. Logan to the United States Senate has created universal satisfaction among the Republicans of New York.

Counterfeit $4 Canadian bills are said to be numerously circulating in the States. A pretty safe rule will be to refuse all foreign paper currency.

The Greenback Terre Haute Express, pulling away the veil of futurity, sees Grant and Tilden arrayed against each other in 1880, with Grant the winner.

The election of Matt Carpenter to the Senate convinces the Pittsburg Dispatch that the matter of opposition to, or support of the President, does not enter into the elections in Wisconsin.

Frank Moulton lately made an address at a Brooklyn church fair, in favor of a fence at parsonage, saying that he believed in fencing ministers in. He's a thundering religious chap, that Moulton is.

Gen. Sherman had a grand reception at Atlanta the other day. Thousands of citizens came out to meet him, though the military turn-out was nothing like that which greeted him at his visit in 1864.

With the gathering of Logan, Conkling, Carpenter and Cameron, the Boston Herald is bound to concede that all the premonitions of a Grant campaign are not confined to Democratic newspapers.

Col. Bishop Mann, a self-exiled Southern rebel, is living in good style at Chantilly, near Paris. There is room in that vicinity for Jeff Davis, Bob Toombs and 5,000 others the same sort if they want to go.

What with the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments, the rebel war claims, the bloated oath, the ciphers, Gen. Bragg, Gen. Hill, and other elements of disturbance all pressing at once, the Cincinnati Gazette regards it as a sadly torn up Democracy.

When Charles M. Brennan and Miss Meta Peech stood before the Rev Father Pelletin at the alter of Francis Xavier Church in New York, to be married Wednesday night, the priest commenced a congratulatory address, and fell forward, dead of heart disease.

James Freeman, once a leading lawyer of Wisconsin, is so important a citizen of Racine that the Common Council has passed a special enactment which prohibits all liquor dealers from giving, selling, lending, or permitting him to have liquor in any way, shape, or manner.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

On the 27th, the Department of the Interior received information confirmatory of the reported crushing of the Sioux Indians by Sitting Bull. The Department believed there would soon be a large gathering of hostile Indians in that section, but did not anticipate immediate hostilities.

NEAR Bradford, Pa., on the evening of the 27th, a locomotive-boiler exploded during a trial trip. One man was killed outright, three others fatally, and four seriously, injured.

A TERRIBLE tragedy occurred at Morrisville, Mo., a few evenings ago. John McFarland, wife and grand-daughter were killed by an insane man named Rowell, who was afterward shot dead by a neighbor whom he had attacked.

THE Town of Lockwood, in Texas, was struck by a tornado, on the evening of the 26th. Four houses were blown to the ground, including churches, the Court-House and Masonic Hall. One person was killed and several badly hurt.

IN a recent divorce proceeding, a Chicago Judge held that when man and wife separated by consent it was not desertion, as contemplated by the statute, and that a decree of divorce for desertion could not be obtained.

A DISPATCH from Washington, on the 28th, says the excess of exports over imports for December, 1878, were $35,128,000; for the year 1878, $304,542,000.

AT Indianapolis, on the 29th, John B. Archer and William D. Merrick were hung, the former for the murder of a fellow-gambler and the latter for the murder of his wife. Upon the scaffold each protested his innocence.

A WASHINGTON telegram of the 29th says the Government, in respect to Sitting Bull, had decided to require him and his followers to surrender as prisoners of war or return to Canada.

On the 30th ult., the Secretary of War, at the request of Sec'y Schurz, directed Gen. Sheridan to issue the necessary orders for the release, at Fort Robinson, of the widows and orphans of the Cheyennes, and to deliver them to the care of the Ogalalla Sioux, their relatives, as requested by Red Cloud.

A DESTRUCTIVE tornado visited the Town of Iuka, Miss., on the afternoon of the 30th ult. Four houses and one church were blown down, and one colored woman and five children were killed outright, one of the latter being found a quarter of a mile from their home.

THE Board of Experts for investigating the yellow-fever epidemic of last year submitted a long report to the Joint Congressional Committee, on the 30th ult., in which they recommend that the necessary steps be taken by Congress to secure the co-operation of the Spanish and other foreign Governments in an earnest effort to ascertain the cause of the disease in the West Indies, or lessen the chances of its transportation to the United States or other countries. An outline of a system of quarantine is presented, the efficient carrying into effect of which contemplates a well-organized Health Department. The report is ground-less, and it is recommended that the bodies of persons who die of it be promptly and thoroughly cremated, and the assembling of persons at the funerals be discouraged. The report is unanimous, with the exception of Dr. Fallgraf, who holds to the view that yellow fever may be developed by indigenous, as well as by imported, poison.

DURING the month of January, the subscriptions to the Astor Library has amounted to $151,851.50. Calls, during the same period, $150,000.

ON the 23d of February, 1878, the savings bank at Dexter, Me., was robbed, and F. W. Barron, the Cashier, murdered, as was supposed, in a shockingly inhuman manner. A large number of detectives have since been investigating the affair, and the conclusion has been reached that Barron was a defaulter to a large amount, and that he undoubtedly committed suicide.

THE Alms-House near Louisville, Ky., was destroyed by fire, on the 31st ult. Of those in the house, two lost their lives, either by burning or by injuries received while attempting to escape.

A CHEYENNE CHIEF, known as "Wild Hog," murdered and barely scalped at Fort Robinson, Neb., attempted suicide, on the 31st ult. He stabbed himself in four places in the region of the heart, and the wounds were pronounced very dangerous if not fatal.

ANOTHER call was issued, on the 1st, by Sec'y Sheridan, for the remainder of $30,000,000 5-20 bonds (registered and coupon). Interest to cease on the 1st of May.

THERE was a net increase of coin in the United States Treasury during January to the amount of $200,749.

THE public-debt statement, as published on the 1st, indicates the following: Total debt bearing interest of $2,093,020,860; $2,408,346,823. Cash in Treasury, $392,450,-695. Debt, less cash in Treasury, $5,035,896,-130. Decrease during January, $3,761,990.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE New York Tribune of the 27th says it was stated most positively that the body of A. T. Stewart had not been recovered by Mrs. Judge Hilton, or any agent. The Tribune, however, did not say the alleged recovery had been denied by Judge Hilton or Mrs. Stewart.

DR. LINDERMAN, the Director of the United States Mint, died, at his residence, in Washington, on the 27th.

THE sub-committee of the Judiciary Committee of the National House of Representatives reached Chicago, on the 28th, to investigate the charges against Judge Blodgett, of the United States District Court of the Northern District of Illinois.

PRESIDENT HAYES, on the 29th, nominated Senator Christiancy, of Michigan, to be Minister to Peru. The latter accepted, and the nomination was immediately and unanimously confirmed by the Senate.

On the 30th ult., the Louisiana State Senate passed—19 to 17—the House bill repealing the charter of the Louisiana Lottery Company, with an amendment that it shall go into effect only after March 31, 1879. The Lottery Company, should the bill become a law, will appeal to the courts, on the plea that the repeal violates their contract with the State.

TWO UNITED STATES SENATORS were elected, on the 31st ult.—John J. Ingalls by the Legislature of Kansas (re-elected), and B. F. Jonas by the Legislature of Louisiana, to succeed Senator Eustis.

PRESIDENT HAYES sent a message to the Senate, on the 31st ult., in which he firmly maintains his position with regard to the New York Custom-House officers, and says it is his purpose to do all in his power to introduce into that important office the reforms which the country desires. He concludes: "With my information of facts in the case, and with a sense of the responsible obligation imposed upon me by the Constitution, to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, I regard it as my plain duty to suspend the officers in question, and to make the nominations now before the Senate, in order that this important office may be honestly and efficiently administered."

FOREIGN.

ACCORDING to London telegrams of the 27th, it was estimated that one-seventh of all the spindles and looms in the Blackburn district had been stopped, and that 8,000 operatives were out of employment and destitute.

NEWS was received in Paris, on the 27th, that the rebellious natives of Boler, in Guinea, had defeated the Portuguese troops in a pitched battle. The latter lost 300 men, who desire to take advantage of the provisions of the Dunkeld law, say, that, if enlisted, Private Jones, 21 days, 12—the following being the names of those voting in the affirmative: Bliss, Bridges, Butler, Collins, Day, Dodds, Ferrell, Franklin, Hough, Hurst, Kelly, Millspaugh, Luttrell, Mackey, Moller, Phelps, Ridgeland, Rudolph, Scully, Seaton, Sweeney, and Wright. Among the bills introduced was one providing for a treaty with Spain, by which it was passed authorizing the Secretary of War to erect hospitals for the use of that city, and directs interred in private village or city cemeteries.

In the Senate, on the 28th, a bill was introduced and referred, appointing to Brooklyn to provide suitable police regulations for the Government of the various Indian reservations, and for the punishment of murder, robbery and other crimes committed thereon. An exclusive report was made on the memorial of the Missouri Legislature, asking for the removal of the National Capital to some central portion of the Union. A favorable report was made on the bill to extend the time for pre-emptors on the public lands. The Claim bill of Warren Hollister was further contested and its final reading refused—yeas, 17; nays, 26. A motion to take up Mr. Edmunds' resolution declaring the validity of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Constitutional Amendments was agreed to—29 to 16. In the House, the Legislative Appropriation bill was reported and referred to Committee of the Whole. The bill to restrict the immigration of Chinese was taken up, and, after considerable discussion, referred to the

THE JAIL DELIVERY.

Arrest of the Parties who Broke Jail and Liberated Moore—One of them Admits their Guilt

The village was a good deal startled Thursday by the announcement of the arrest of the parties who broke into the Jail and released the man Moore. Not so much perhaps on the account of the arrest as the knowledge of who were the guilty parties. Sewell Bradley and John Cummings were arrested for the offense upon information which the officers obtained from Moore, and upon being arrested, Cummings revealed the whole plot. The fact, as we learn them from the statements of Moore and Cummings, on the examination of the latter Tuesday are somewhat as follows: The plans as arranged was that Cummings should, coming church service on Sunday night, break the lock on the door and thus liberate Moore, who should then be secreted by Bradley in Rev. Mr. Rafter's barn. When time enough had elapsed to accomplish, this Duvall, who was also confined in jail awaiting examination, should go to Under Sheriff Paquette's house and tell him that Moore had been taken away by two men in a sleigh. This plan was successfully carried out, and the officers thus put on the wrong trail for moore. Duvall was induced to play the part he did, by the promise that if his examination result it in his being bound over to the circuit court, he would be liberated also. Moore remained in Mr Rafter's barn from Sunday night until the following Saturday night, when he left for Petoskey, being supplied with provisions by Bradley during his sojourn in the barn. The examination of Cummings resulted in his being bound over to the Circuit court for trial in the sum of $500. Being unable to secure bail he was committed to jail. Bradley's examination was postponed until Monday, pending which he was placed under the same bonds, with Dr. Bates and Mr. Rafter as sureties. Wednesday Dr. Gerow learning that Bradley had said he would not be here Monday, turned him over to the Sheriff and he was lodged in jail. The officers from the first had their suspicions, and strong ones, regarding who were the guilty parties, and it was because of their desire to bring them to punishment, that they took the trouble they did to secure Moore. The matter has been well conducted on their part, as the result shows.

It is but justly to state that Bradley denies all complicity in the matter, but the full facts in the case will, probably, appear in its examination.—Cheboygan Tribune.

MONEY TO LOAN, on good real estate security. Inquire of A. B Upright, Charlevoix Mich. 16-1yr

Only think of it! Little Anna Beeson, of Nilles is about eight years old, and is already heiress to half a million.

The next meeting of the Grand Lodge of Michigan Masons will be held at Detroit, the fourth Tuesday in January, 1880.

A bill was introduced in the House of Representatives last Monday, appropriating $100,000,000 to meet the requirements of the Arrears of Pension act.

The subject of the extension of the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad from the M E Camp Ground to Mackinaw, via Little Traverse, is again being revived.

The bill for extending the time for the construction of the Marquette & Mackinaw railroad, two years, has been passed by the House. The Senate will doubtless concur.

The loss of 28 in the Senate over the New York amendments is ended by their confirmation by a vote of 39 to 21. This is a temporary victory for the President and secretary Sherman and a defeat for Conkling. The Senator from New York will, however, take his time.

Bishop Monk, of Marquette, whose resignation was accepted in Rome, will be succeeded by Rev Edward Jacker, late of Fond du Lac, as administrator. Bishop Monk intends to return to the work with the Indians of this state, among whom he was formerly a Catholic missionary for many years.

The bond offered for the Marquette and Mackinaw railroad has been extended, and it is said a strong company has been organized in Detroit to push the enterprise to completion. Francis Palmer, H. P. Baldwin, J. J. Bagley, Z. Chandler, Allan Shelden, M. S. Smith, C. H. Buhl and other Detroit men are named in connection with it.

The Republican papers of this State, with scarcely an exception, express a decided preference for Michigan's favorite old "war horse"—Hon. Zachariah Chandler—for Senator to fill the vacancy occasioned by the retirement of Judge Christiancy. And in doing so, they honestly reflect the sentiment of the rank and file of the Republican party.

There will be a ball dance at W. P Empey's Hall, at the Head of South Arm, on Friday Eve., Feb. 21, 1879 A lively time is expected, and a cordial invitation given to all. Music by Professor's White and Richardson. Bill for music 50cts. Supper can be had if desired.

South Arm, Jan. 23, 1879.

The Democrats and Greenbackers of this State are terribly tumbled up and down in their minds over the prospective return of Zach. Chandler to the United States Senate. They are willing to do almost anything—to take the bitterest kind of physic—to defeat him, which is of itself a very good reason why "Old Zach" should receive the support of every straight out stalwart Republican.

Ex Secretary of State Fish, in an interview, states that about the time Gen. Grant retired from the Presidency he took a speculative interest in California mining stocks, and got back the money he put in and a profit of $25,000 in gold. The $25,000 he put aside to pay his expenses abroad, and he told Mr. Fish that as soon soon as it was spent he would return. General Grant's income, Mr. Fish says, is about $9,000 or $10,000 a year.

Michigan to-day is rich. Her industries are varied and prosperous. Her population and wealth have rapidly increased, until she stands superior as all of the original 13 States excepting three—New York, Pensylvania and Massachusetts. Since 1850 when our present constitution was adopted, the population of Michigan has risen from 397,654 to 1,636,561 in 1874, and at least 1,700,000 in 1876 a gain of 375 per cent.; her votes cast at general elections have increased from 51,509 in 1849 to 317,915 in 1870, or 508 per cent.; her railroad mileage has increased from 339 in 1850 to 3,768 in 1877, or 523 per cent.; her equalized valuation of property from $30,074,270 in 1851 to $330,000,000 in 1876, or almost 2,100 per cent.—Lansing Republican.

Letter from Boyne.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

We are having an interesting time here on the subject of religion. Indeed the excitement seems to be all around us. Rev. Mr. Palmer, of the Baptist faith, is giving a series of lectures in the Boyne school house, and has got the "power" pretty high up. Rev. Mr. Heath, of the Methodists, is also holding forth in the Dyer school house, and at other places, with like effect.

Rev. Mr. Irish is also intending to lecture upon the "Signs of the Times," and the Faith of the Latter Day Saints. We are informed that the Methodist Ministers, and some others in Ospreyville of Charlevoix, have ordered the doors closed against Mr. Irish; but we would advise that the people give him a hearing, at least; and I think they will, in spite of the edict to close the doors against him. Our Methodist friends seem to have forgotten their own origin as a sect. Mr. Irish has an oddity or two, but, spite of that, he has within him much that the people ought to hear. John Wesley must have appeared very odd to many in the old original thirteen States, since, having made a very extensive tour through them, he returned to England without having made a single convert to his faith. John Wesley preached then much that is now very unpopular with his professed followers, as may be seen from numerous extracts from his sermons.

Mr. Irish preaches pure Bible doctrine, and shows from the Bible that just such a book as the Book or Mormon must come forth as one man before the Second Advent of the Son of Man. At any rate give him a hearing. If our Boy friends please, let them not act over the people as though they held a bill of sale of every man, woman, and child in the whole country, signed sealed and delivered into their hands. This is not a land of liberty, therefore, let the people hear and judge for themselves. This is the kind given right, my Rev. friends, and you have no right to take it from them. If your views upon questions of difference on matter of faith with the Latter Day Saints, come out like men and test them by the common rules of logic and revelation. "Other wise hold thy peace, and lay thine hand upon thy mouth."

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed by Roswell Mudge and Margaret Mudge his wife, of Marion, Charlevoix county, Michigan, to W. H. Custer, of Charlevoix, Mich., State and county aforesaid, dated August 2, A. D. 1876, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 25th day of August, A. D. 1876, in Liber 2 of Mortgages, on page 225, which mortgage was duly assigned by said W. H. Custer to Elias J. Beach, of Ann Arbor, Mich., on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1876, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 25th day of September, A. D. 1876, in Liber 2 of Mortgages, on page 475, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the amount, two hundred and fifty-two dollars and sixty-seven cents, including taxes and interest, besides attorney fee of fifty dollars, provided for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof; Now, Therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given, that on Friday, the 11th day of March, A.D. 1879, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the court house in the village of Charlevoix, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county is holden) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney fee of twenty dollars, provided for in said mortgage

THE INDIAN BUREAU.

The Argument Against the Transfer to the War Department.

The report embodying the views of Senators Saunders and Oglesby and Representatives Stewart and Van Vorhes, four of the eight members of the Joint Committee on the Indian Transfer Question, has been completed and prosecuted to Congress. The Associated Press gives the following synopsis:

It is shown that various evils and abuses grew up under the administration of Indian affairs by military officers, and, notwithstanding the reformatory legislation of March 3, 1847, they continued to grow up to the last hour in which the War Department had control of the Indian population, and while had been done toward Indian civilization under the War Department's management that public opinion has acquiesced in the assumption that the Indians were not susceptible to civilization. It is estimated that of all the fighting Indians of the country could be got together they could not muster more than 15,000, and the idea of their ever concentrating for a strike previous to simply preserving, because it is impossible. Indian wars on a large scale are over, and we may reasonably look to the latter portion of our national history as in the past.

In reference to the sentiments of the Indians, on the subject, the Secretary of the Interior made to the committee statements giving the views and votes of the various tribes, which gives a percentage of 97 voters in one against transfer, nearly all the tribes being unanimously opposed to the proposition. All the religious denominations in this country are absolutely opposed to the proposed change of management. Their opinions and beliefs deserve and should receive respectful consideration. They have among the Sioux Indians some unruly tribes in a lamentable fact, and to this extent military control would specifically call the attention of Congress. We are of opinion that in such special cases the military should have temporary control, and that the President have power to place such warlike tribes under military discipline, the same as he would a city or State invaded by mobs or revolution. That the Indians can be Anglo-Saxonized to the second all cavil to the case of the Winnebagoes and Omahas, who reside on reservations in the State of Nebraska. They live in comfortable houses, have good barns, cultivate their land and raise as good wheat, corn and potatoes as are produced through the later of any white men. They own stock, cattle and ponds, and no more orderly community can be found than on these two reservations. They are petitioning to become citizens, a question of such vital importance to their race that it must soon be solved. Is it necessary to put these people under military management? We think not.

Whether the transfer of the Indian Bureau where it is or is relegated to the War Department, a general system of reform and improvement should continue, and among the most important things commanding immediate attention is to provide that the civil law of the United States be extended over all Indians who still roam at large there, with a code of laws applicable to them, defining crime and providing a judiciary, especially in what is known as the Indian Territory.

In the opinion of the committee, such legislation is imperatively needed, and no time ought to be lost in making the necessary provisions therefor. The Indian Agent seems to be the objective point to which all those opposed to the present policy of the Government point in scorn and derision. They assert that the Indian Agent is synonymous with "fraud, corruption and corruption." The committee made different inquiry into the present system of conducting the agencies, and are of opinion that, as a general rule, the Agent is more abused against than slumped. There are now seventy-four Agents employed, and at every opportunity, as we learn, the Department proposes to reduce the number by the consolidation of agencies and lessening of operations where it can be done with justice to the tribes. Men of integrity, who are competent to administer the affairs of an Indian agency successfully, can, in most cases, get larger salaries at less exertion in other businesses. The salary should be large enough to enable honorable men of limited circumstances to fill the position, and to enable them to take their families with them to the agencies, and to support them there. They are not entitled to be more liberal, and the tenure of office should be secure for four years, provided the Agent should prove worthy.

The laws providing for the punishment of wrongdoers in this branch of service ought to be exceedingly severe. The guilty should be punished with as unmistakable earnestness that will convince all others of the firm purpose of our government. We are assured that this policy has been inaugurated, and that already good results are seen, as the Commissioners of Indian Affairs testifies that there has not been a single defalcation under the present administration.

The committee say they cannot find any good ground for the common statement that the War Department is any more economical and efficient than the Interior Department in the purchase of supplies and their transportation. It is found that both Departments have excellent systems, and that both have made great improvements of late years. The improvement in the management of the Indian Bureau is said to be especially marked. Its system of business is pronounced very effective, and the organization of the office is considered complete enough to be a model to all outside irregularities.

Your committee are of opinion that the reservations should be decreased, and that, as rapidly as possible, small tribes or parts of tribes be placed on large reservations, where they take land in severalty, do away with their tribal relations, and prepare for citizenship. We are of opinion that the Indian Bureau should be a distinct department, with the Chief a member of the President's cabinet. This will add much to the solidarity of future negotiations in Indian affairs. The Indian should be protected in his rights to his land, and a safeguard ought to be thrown around him, so as to prevent designing persons from alluring his homestead, or inducing him to sell it for a trifling compensation. He should not have the right to sell his land, without the consent of the Department, under twenty-one years.

Your committee can discover not one good reason why the proposed change should be made. They believe that harm, rather than good, to the red men would result from the change, and that no possible advantage could result to the Government from it.

Your committee are, therefore, of opinion that it is not expedient to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department.

The report is accompanied by a bill authorizing the President to "transfer the custody, control and management of any Indian tribes from the Interior to the War Department temporarily, whenever, in his judgment, he shall deem it advisable to do so, either on account of actual or apprehended hostilities of Indians against the United States, or in case of difficulties between such Indians and settlers." The bill further proposes to authorize the President to detail any officers of the army to act as Indian Agents or Inspectors, or in any other capacity in the Indian Service, and exercising the same powers, and subject to the same rules and regulations as civil officers, and an appropriation of $15,000 is recommended to pay the traveling expenses of officers thus detailed during the next fiscal year.

To Claimants for Arrears of Pensions.

The Commissioner of Pensions has issued the following circular letter, which is of interest to all claimants for arrears under the recently-enacted Pension-Arrears bill:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 27, 1879.

SIR: Persons who are entitled to arrears of pension, under the Act granting Arrears, approved Jan. 25, 1879, and whose pensions were granted previous to that date, will not require the assistance of a claim agent in obtaining the amount due them. All correspondence in relation to any claim for such arrears, will be with the person entitled, and no claim agent will be recognized in such claims.

A letter addressed to the Commissioner of Pensions, signed by the person who was in receipt of the pension at the date aforesaid, and two witnesses, in the presence of a magistrate, will be the only application required —and upon which the rights of all parties concerned will be adjusted.

☞The Pension Certificate should not be sent to this office—but it must be exhibited to the magistrate. ☜

The letter should be in the following or equivalent form:

To the Commissioner of Pensions:

I, ..., a pensioner under pension certificate No. ....., hereby apply for the arrears due me, under the Act granting Arrears of Pension, approved January 25, 1879. My Postoffice address is—[here insert the name of the Postoffice, and, if the claimant resides in a city, the name and number of the street and residence must also be given.]

Very respectfully, J. A. BENTLEY,
Commissioner of Pensions.

The "Plain-Spoken" Woman.

Plain-speaking is an excellent thing in woman—when she has the harmless habit of talking to herself. When it becomes general, or rather when it becomes specific, the victim if she be a woman "is a fool, a crank," and if he be a man takes his hat from the hall table and goes out "to list to Nature's teachings." When a woman speaks plainly to a man he feels for a moment that he is the worst specimen of humanity on this footstool; that no one has got to begin life all over again; that his unmixed is too good to live; and then in the immediately following reaction he considers the plain-spoken woman the worst person that ever lived, and himself the worst-abused saint above ground. When his excitement is over he accepts the criticism right or wrong and avoids the critic to the end of time.

The plain-spoken woman is always ready to be done by as she does to others, and if she selects her subjects from her own sex she is apt—to paraphrase the words of the elder Weller—to learn a good many things that she did not know before. But the plain-spoken woman is always an egotist and treats the criticisms of her friends—no, she has no friends, her subjects—as mere outbursts of temper and takes them as deserved compliments to her honesty. But she nearly always scores with men. They read it. Has she not insight? She knows men. They are self-conceited and need "taking down." They are not honest and need "showing up." Then they do not "talk back." They simply take her medicine and their hats and meditate on the state.

The plain-spoken woman rides a hobby. It is honesty. Courtesy is but another name for dishonesty. If she is glad to see a caller, she says so. If she is not, she says so. She calls a spade a spade, a lie a lie, and she sees nothing but spades and lies along her pathway. Discourteous truth is her god. Upon its shrine she is ready to sacrifice her friends and all the amenities of social life. She does not take hidden and unknown motives into account. Not she. Motive? Fiddlesticks! "Fiddlesticks" is her favorite word. It is her expression of disgust with shams. It speaks volumes, that word. It is the summing up of human dishonesty. Why, is not apparent to the average mind. But it is the name of an instrument that is used to scratch lies out of another instrument. For music and poetry are both lies. Anything pleasant is a lie. "If it be pleasant it must be false." That is her theory. "Talk to her about tact. Tact moves the world, does it? Fiddlesticks! Tact is dishonesty. Tact is a subterfuge." So she runs on, forgetful that there is an honesty without discourtesy, a truthfulness without incivility.

But there is a woman of quite a different character in many of our homes, one who sometimes speaks plainly, too, a mother or a wife, who having our welfare at heart, reproves with tenderness and lovingly leads the way to better things. To such is given our heart's homage and in it she reigns forever, because she "chides our wanderings but relieves our pain."—Alliance.

The Black Plague.

The terror which the appearance of the Black Plague has caused in Europe might seem to be excessive, were it not that history records many instances of dreadful ravages wrought by a disease similar to this one. The plague in London, in 1665, carried off about 70,000 souls in less than six months; and, though English readers are most familiar with this event, it is not a solitary case. In the same year with the London plague, 40,000 died in Neapolitan Territory. In the fourteenth century, during the reign of Edward III., there was a plague much more general and destructive than the one of 1665. This plague was supposed to have had its origin in the Far Cathay in 1333, though that region was then so remote that little could have been known about it. But at least it was certain that the plague came by way of Constantinople, Florence, Vienna and Paris to London. It was estimated that 60,000 died in Florence alone, 100,000 in Venice, 50,000 in Paris, 60,000 in Avignon and 100,000 in London. The plague was known still further back. The beginnings of authentic history contain reference to it. One thousand years before Christ 70,000 persons died of it in a single year in Palestine. Rome lost half its population by the plague in 542 B. C., and 10,000 a hundred years later. It is said that the plague spread over the whole known world in the third century, and in the eleventh century one-half the known population was swept away by it. There is a very recent instance of its appearance in Russia previous to the present epidemic. It destroyed 40,000 people at Resht, on the Caspian Sea, in 1832, and it almost annihilated the Russian army which crossed the Balkans in 1828-29.

A remarkable feature of the present plague, and one that makes it all the more alarming, is its rapid spread in spite of efforts to prevent it. Quarantine in accordance with which most epidemics are now explained, assumes that a certain incubative temperature is required to keep the germs alive, and that excessive cold kills them. Yellow fever, for instance, has never spread as an epidemic in cold countries and the first severe frost kills the germs in warm countries. But this plague is spreading in midwinter in the coldest countries in Europe. It is said to have approached within a few miles of Moscow. The mortality, moreover, is unusually large. Some reports say as high as 75 per cent. of all persons attacked die. There is a remarkable Arabic story of the great Indian city, containing nearly 2,000,000 inhabitants, that was blotted out of existence two or three centuries ago by a visitation of an epidemic similar in its character to the Black Plague.

There is a occasion for all the alarm that is felt in Europe in view of this dreadful visitation. Quarantine regulations have already been established by Turkey, Italy, Austria and Germany; and the other Nations of Europe will unquestionably protect themselves in the same manner. The usefulness of quarantine is no longer disputed by scientific men. No longer ago than last summer it saved Galveston and Mobile from yellow fever, though both cities had previously suffered much from it, and jubilant man who spoke, as though he had committed an unpardonable breach of manners; then relapsed into himself again, and resumed his deep study of the board at which he sat.

Two players about whose table stood a number of mute and interested spectators signified by their looks, and not by words, that a mistake had occurred. No one endeavored to make an explanation.

"The wrong pawn was moved," said one of the principals.

His opponent reached out his arm, and with one sweep of the hand brushed the men from the board.

A beardless youth in one corner of the room indecorously thumped a knight on his board and cried "check!" Every eye was fixed upon him with a withering sarcasm that made him shrink about half his natural size, and then an awful stillness fell upon the room, and the players resumed their thinking.

"Once upon a time," said the Record chaperon, "an American chess player was desirous of becoming acquainted with a famous French player, and, to accomplish his desires, hunted up the cafés of Paris, and lived in the chess-parlors, in the hope that some one would fulfill his desires, and open fire on him across a table with the Frenchman as an opponent. After months of fruitless endeavor, the American found himself one day in a select club-room, behind the chair of a friend, who was playing a most excellent game with the French expert. While the game was in progress the friend received a message that necessitated his immediate departure, and, turning to the American chess-player, invited him to finish the game. The Frenchman never removed his eyes from the table, and, therefore, did not notice the pleased expression that diffused itself over the American's face. The game progressed in silence. The American made a master move. In his delight he called 'check.' The Frenchman raised his eyebrows and shoulders simultaneously, and, in a voice not to be mistaken, exclaimed: 'I do not play with chatter-boxes,' swept the chessmen from the table and sailed out of the door."

"Check!" said a smothered voice, in the dim corner part of the room. The old players straightened their bent forms, cast dagger-looks at the meek old man, doubled themselves up again, and silence reigned supreme.

"You see," said the knowing one, "a fellow will give way to his feelings occasionally; but it won't do to give way too often. That's the second time the fellow said 'check' this afternoon, and I'm in favor of ruling him out."

"Check," cried the opponent of the man with a smothered voice, as he vigorously jumbled a pawn in with a rook.

"Check," said the knowing one.

This was too much.

"Gentlemen," said a burly man, in black, "gentlemen—"

"Shish," hissed a dozen tongues, and the players crawled within themselves, and again silence was supreme.—Philadelphia Record.

Hungarians and Romanians.

The Hungarians, as all who have traveled on the Danube know, are dandies in their own fashion. They delight in clean shirts, richly embroidered in red and black, in cotton drawers or duck trousers, and white hose or crochet work, such as our English ladies affect upon their clothes, and in magnificent boots, which are brushed to brightness at least once a week. The male Roumanian, on the other hand, is dirty and careless in his attire. A filthy sheepskin jacket, swarming with fleas, is his chief garment; short trowsers, of leather or the coarsest cloth, and the everlasting conical woolen cap, together with some minor articles, among which the pistol or knife stuck in the waistband must be forgotten, completing his attire. But when you turn from the men to the women, we find that the comparison is reversed. Nothing can well be more picturesque than the dress of the Hungarian women on the banks of the Lower Danube. At Mohacs, for example, one saw them marching down to the river to get water, clad in a pair of their husband's enormous boots, a short petticoat, newly reserved by the knees, and a sheepskin jacket that was the property of their better half. Again, at the frontier station, just before entering Roumania, my sensibilities were somewhat shocked at seeing a girl of seventeen busily engaged in sweeping the veranda, and in public but a linen undergarment, of very moderate dimensions, and this in spite of the fact that at least a dozen soldiers were lounging about close to her. In Hungary, in short, while the man is well dressed, his wife or daughter is dressed like a savage. In Roumania, on the other hand, the dress of the women is decidedly better than that of the men, and often a most fascinating contrast to that worn by their Hungarian sisters. In fact, after crossing the frontier, I saw no dresses which were not at least decent and sufficient, according to the Western standard, which is more than can be said of my experience in some parts of Hungary.—Fortnightly Review.

—The Swiss Roman Catholics having received permission from their Superiors to vote at the elections of parish priests, instead of leaving the Old Catholics the monopoly of this privilege, they have just carried, by 446 votes to 25, the nomination of a Roman Catholic priest at Steigelegier, in the Bernese.

—"Sadlier's Catholic Directory" reports for the United States 1 Cardinal, 1 Archbishop, 52 Bishops, 3,750 priests, 5,585 churches, 78 colleges, 577 academies, nearly 2,000 parochial schools, 345 charitable institutions and a Roman Catholic population of 6,875,000. In 1808 there were only 80 churches, in 1830 there were 232, in 1840, 454; in 1850, 1,073; in 1860, 2,385; in 1870, 3,995. The Tablet says that more churches were added in 1875 than there were in the whole country in 1845, when there were 675.

—President Chadbourne, of Williams College, said to the Massachusetts teachers at their recent meeting: "If all moral and religious education is neglected we shall some day be swallowed up by corruption. We must the same degree of responsibility and moral honesty that the Puritans possessed, though we want by no means to go back to their methods of education. Not consist in mastering languages, but is found in that moral training which restrains from the temptations of the play-ground and which teaches that a manner thing can be done than to fall in a recitation."

Train the Boys for Business.

There is one element in the home instruction of boys to which, says a Boston paper, too little attention has been given, and that is the cultivation of habits of punctuality, system, order and responsibility. In too many households boys from every-day work are too much administered to by loving mothers or other female members of the family. Lives during those years are the halcyon days of their existence. Up in the morning with the first whistle; nothing to do but to start off early enough not to be late; looking upon an errand as taking so much time and memory away from enjoyment; little thought of personal appearance except when reminded by mothers to "spruce up" a little; finding his wardrobe always where mother puts it—in fact, having nothing to do but enjoy himself.

Thus his life goes on until school ends. Then he is ready for business. He goes into an office where everything is system, order, precision. He is expected to keep things neat and orderly, sometimes kindle fires, fix letters, do errands—in short, become a part of a well-regulated machine, where everything moves in systematic grooves, and each one is responsible for correctness in his department, and where in place of ministers to his comfort, he finds task-masters, more or less lenient, to be sure, and everything in marked contrast to his previous life.

In many instances the change is too great. Errors become numerous; blunders, overlooked at first, get to be a matter of serious moment; then patience is overtasked, and the boy is told his services are no longer wanted. This is his first, and sometimes he never rallies from it. Then comes the surprise to the parents, who too often never know the real cause, nor where they have failed in the training of their children.

What is wanted is for every boy to have something special to do; to have some duty at a definite hour, and to learn to watch for that time to come; to be answerable for a certain portion of the routine of the household; to be trained to anticipate the time when he may enter the ranks of business, and be fortified with habits of energy, accuracy, and application, often of more importance than superficial book learning.—Scientific American.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—Lamp-wick dipped in hot vinegar before using is said to prevent offensive smell from lamps.

—Jelly Cake.—Two eggs, beat considerable, then add a little, thicken with flour until you can roll out. Divide the quantity into twelve pieces, roll out each piece as thin as possible, then fry in hot fat like doughnuts. Sprinkle white sugar over each and serve.

—Any dairyman troubled with cows having sore teats should use plenty of linseed oil before and after milking. He will find but few, if any, sores about this year's end if this be done. Many cows that are kickers would delight to be milked if a little linseed oil was used on the teats.—Exchange.

—The following is a recipe for a superb white cake as made by Mrs. Henry Clay: Five pints of flour, three and one-half pints of powdered sugar, whites of twenty-four eggs, well beaten, one pint of butter; beat the sugar and butter together till like a cream; put in a little at a time of the whites, adding flour till all is thoroughly mixed; bake in a moderate oven.

—Chocolate Cake.—Two cups of sugar, one cup of butter, one and one-half cups of milk, four cups of flour, two whole eggs, yelks of four eggs, two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar and one teaspoonful of soda. Bake in jelly-tins. This makes two loaves of three layers each. Filling—Whites of four eggs, two cups of powdered sugar, seven large tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate; flavor with lemon or vanilla. Put icing between each layer and also on the top.

—The following is a good receipt for worms in horses: Powdered sulphur, two ounces; powdered sulphur, four ounces; salt, three ounces; mixed well. Divide this mass into twelve parts, and mix one with the food every night. This will not only remove worms, but also tone up the digestive organs, so that the parasites cannot find a foothold.—Country Gentleman.

Brooms that will Sweep Clean.

A few acres of broom-corn for home manufacture on farms requiring a number of hired hands the year round, affords remunerative employment for many unemployed days, both from inclemency of the weather and other causes. It is generally calculated that a ton of brush will make from 1,200 to 1,300 brooms; the wire, handles, twine, etc., average from three to five cents per broom, and a complete outfit for making brooms can be purchased for about $50. Cold, rainy days and long winter evenings afford opportunities for making the brooms without losing time from other work. Two hands, after a little practice, will readily finish in an evening two dozen brooms.

A thrifty farmer who looks to the small economies and never buys that which can be made at home, gives his method of making a home-made broom, which is somewhat after this fashion: When ready to go to work cut a much finer brush as will be needed for the number of brooms to be made; put the butt-ends in warm water to soak a while. When sufficiently softened tack one end of a strong twine or wire, as the case may be, to the broom-handle, and bind the bushes from the lower end. Fasten the other end of the string, which is some two feet long, to a small round stick upon which the operator can sit, and bind his first layer of brush firmly. Continue putting on and winding until three layers have been secured, pulling upward, as the handle is turned, to fasten the string. Now commence another row, nearer the lower end of the handle, and proceed as before, finishing the third course or tier with the longest and finest brush. Wind the cord around singly a few times after the brush is all on, and fasten the end with a carpet tack. When a broad or flat broom is made (the popular form), more of the brush may be put upon two opposite sides than upon the other portions. Then tie the two ends of a wire or strong cord together, slip it over the handle, to a suitable place upon the broom, and sew in place with a large plaited or iron needle six or eight inches long; sew through and through the brush, letting the twine at each stitch pass around the portion you have tied on. Point the needle forward in making each stitch so as to have it come out on the opposite side a little further along each time. A second twine may be tied around, and a second sewing made further toward the lower end. Three tiers are sometimes made, but two are quite enough, unless the brush is very long. With a little practice homemade brooms can thus be manufactured pretty quickly, and will prove stronger—if they do not make quite as good an appearance—than brooms made by machinery.—N. Y. World.

Country Doctors' Horses.

The physician who practices his profession in the country must necessarily have a life of considerable hardship, for no matter in what state the weather may be, or at what hour of the night, when a demand is made for his aid, if he would do his duty he must be ready and willing to give his service. In some of the mountainous regions in this county physicians attend families ten and twelve miles from their offices, and are forced to travel that distance with a horse and wagon, generally over the worst roads known, and that, too, often in the night, when the way to an ordinary traveler would be one of great danger to limb and even a risk to life itself. These physicians, however, become acquainted, as they soon must, with almost every spot of ground in their circuit, and their horse, with that wonderful sagacity possessed by the most intelligent of these animals, acting as a guide, it might be said, in this kind of traveling, can generally go to places in perfect safety, at times when other men would run a chance of losing their way, and in some other manner come to grief before they had gone three miles from home. So much dependence do physicians place on their horses that they have been known to fall asleep at night, when riding toward home, and to entrust entirely to their horses until they reached their own stable doors. Once a country doctor, practicing in the Town of Warning, was carried several miles in this manner over a dangerous road, where in portions of which if the wheels of his wagon had gone a foot from the track the horse, wagon and occupant would have been thrown over a precipice a hundred feet or more in height. In going this distance, three bridges were safely crossed, and the doctor was only awakened when the horse arrived at the closed gate near the house, and pawed for admittance.

I am illustration of the dangers in which physicians are exposed, last week when the wind-storm reached the Town of Olive, Dr. Hasbrouck, of Shokan, was at Kromvein, about seven miles distant from home, and drove to Shokan in the night when the wind blew so hard it uncoiled buildings along the route, blew fences down in almost every direction, and often raised his sleigh from the ground. While crossing the long bridge which stretches across the Esopus at Shokan, he found that three planks had been blown out of their place, and, stopping his horse, he was about to alight, and close the opening, when the animal becoming restless, started, and, with a spring, cleared the space, taking the sleigh with him, and soon after coming to another spot where four planks had been blown out, the horse actually jumped over that opening also, taking with him in safety the sleigh and driver, so that the doctor now claims that he has one of the best jumping horses in the country. It certainly was a very dangerous way of crossing the bridge, for the distance to the creek is far enough to break the neck of any horse should it fall through, and a man would quite likely be treated in the same manner; though the doctor is willing to stake his reputation that the horse knew he could go over the place in safety, or he wouldn't have tried it.—Kingston (N. Y.) Freeman.

Beauty and the Birds.

The London fashion journals announce that in Paris, as well as in London, "Fashion now draws largely on natural history for her ornaments. A few years ago it was considered fashionable taste to wear a small caterpillar on an artificial flower, but such scruples have vanished, and lizards and flies of all descriptions are seen on bonnets and muffs; even miniature squirrels and mice are in preparation for ornamenting various articles of the toilet, and large birds serve as nestles for the decoration of evening dresses. The peacock-straw is one of these novelties; the material is white satin, and the paniers take the form of two wings, ornamented with gold and emeralds, the design being peacocks' feathers; the train is of the same form as the tail of the handsomest bird in creation; the front is ornamented at regular intervals with plaits alternating with rows of fringe, and the low-pointed bodice is made with embroidered breadths; the head-dress is a diamond peacock, with outspread tail sparkling with emeralds and rubies. The swan dress is another novelty made of white satin, and made with puniers embroidered with white cotton, and lavishly trimmed with white lace. This toilet was dispatched by Mme. Duboys for the Copenhagen fetes. The same dressmaker has likewise introduced the butterfly dress in the palest blue Levantine silk with tabbier of old gold silk, and the paniers embroidered with multicolored jet, the design of butterflies being carried out in the most delicate manner, with the smallest beads. If well carried out there is marked originality about such dresses."

All this is very well; but there is another not so pleasing side to the picture, as appears from the following letter published in the London World: "I can hardly believe it! But I have before me a letter, written by a gentleman of good faith and position, to a local paper in the Western country, saying that some on a lady who appeared on the 30th of December last at a fancy ball attired as 'winter'; the emblem of winter being robin skins sewn on to a white dress garnished with fur and holly! Is it possible to conceive such senseless cruelty or such a want of taste? It is very lucky for that lady that she did not attend a juvenile ball in such a costume. Assuming it to be true, the mind of our children and homes must have been decoyed and brutally butchered to make a coquette's holiday. I suppose the next thing will be an arrangement of kingfishers for Miss Army; and every cockney snob who can fire a gun' will be prowling about our rivers' pits and islands. Shy Ruparius be there! Everybody has seen the frequent appeals of 'The Baroness' for hospitality to our young feathered friends. And yet the incitement I quote took place not 20,000 miles away from Her Ladyship's favorite seaside winter resort! Down with these, what Bentham called, Pathiosoles!"

FEATHERS have entirely replaces flowers trimmings.

A MERCHANT down town sells more of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup than all other medicines together. It surely must be the best remedy for a cough.

A NUMBER of farms around the Vershire, Vt., copper mines have been made valueless by the sulphurous smoke from the furnaces used for smelting ore, and some time ago the Vermont Mining Company was sued for $500,000 damages by property-owners in the vicinity, but the Court decided for the company.

Beneficent Bedfactors.

When a board of eminent physicians and chemists announced the discovery that, by combining well-known valuable remedies, the most wonderful medicine was produced, which would cure such a wide range of diseases that most all other remedies could be dispensed with, many were sceptical; but proof of its merits by actual trial has dispelled all doubt, and to-day the discoverers of Hop Bitters, are honored and blessed by all as benefactors.

A Sick Senator.

The excessive corpulency of a certain United States Senator has long been the butt of editorial wit and spicy bon mots from the pens of Washington correspondents. Some persons have suspected that his obesity was a disease, and liable to prove fatal. Yet this is the sad fact. Excessive fatness is not only a disease in itself, but one liable to generate other and more serious ones. Chemistry has at last revealed a safe, sure and reliable remedy for this abnormal condition of the system in Allan's Anti-Fat. Distinguished chemists have prosounced it not only harmless, but very beneficial to the system, while removing the diseased condition. Sold by druggists.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, FEB. 18, - - - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Feb. 7, 1879

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Every now and then, through jingling with the administration or running afoul of some pet theories of the importers, the New York Custom House is asked to stand up and turn its pockets inside out, like a schoolboy with suspected contraband articles. Knowing winks have darkened one eye of many a jealous politician as he laid down the law in the palm of his hand, and drew pictures of rottenness and corruption supposed to be underlying the placid surface of the life inside the huge stone building on Wall street.

Whatever the past, may have discovered, the confirmation of General Merritt must be accepted in a great measure as a public endorsement of his course, and in recognition of the purpose he has steadily advanced of making the Custom House here a business establishment from top to bottom. And from the political interest evolved from the battles fought on this field, a glance at the magnitude of the business carried on at this threshold of the port of New York has been had through the overhanging smoke of the "big guns" of investigating committees. The Custom House here is the source of about one hundred millions of dollars to the Government annually. It employs nearly a thousand men, and the practical working of its human machinery involves so many details of interest, that I shall endeavor soon to devote a letter to the subject. To collect this revenue of one hundred millions costs about two and a half millions, leaving a margin which the supporters of protection love to contemplate.

Out of the slush and mud of the February thaw are greatful New Workers taken by the elevated railroads, but when, as was the case on the Ninth avenue line yesterday, an accident detains hungry residents from getting up town, even a bob-tail surface car becomes a wheeled paradise. The detention referred to occurred at a point on the road where, as train after train came up and was blocked, the passengers were unable to leave the cars. Fair weather christians made the air blue with choice selections from their reserves, and as the line of cars gradually stretched along five blocks, the gamins were joined by homeward bound pedestrians on the street below and hootedderisive orders for sandwiches and breakfast for the hungry crowd on high. Workmen worked in vain, and when the delay took to itself a chronic appearance, a bold few let themselves down from the cars to the track, and over the edge down the iron cross pieces supporting the structure to the ground. Soon there was an avalanche of two bundles falling into the street, followed by half a mish of owners. When the cars were finally moved to the stations, the passengers who were too timid to attempt the descent to the street, kept up the appearance of pluck by thrashing the gatekeepers in the vicinity of the nose when tickets were demanded. And now at least three hundred New Yorkers are ashamed to look any well regulated horse car in the face. It is stated on good authority, that the chuckling of the car horses during the elevated block ade could be heard twenty blocks against the wind.

Thos. Nast, the genial, handsome and richly little man who sustains the popularity of Harper's Weekly, and whose odd autograph has become as familiar to the world as that of sturdy John Hancock or ex-treasurer Spinner, was this week made the recipient of a grace and well-merited token of esteem in the shape of a handsome silver vase, presented to him by a committee of the Athens, who are some 3,500 officers and enlisted men of the army and navy of the United States. The vase itself, which is sixteen inches high, shaped like a soldier's canteen, and supported by two eagles of exquisite workmanship, is a rich and valuable present, and the circumstances of its presentation and the speeches with which it was accompanied, render it ten-fold more highly to be prized. Mr Nast has already been a staunch friend of the army and navy, as well as of the general principles of honesty, justice and common sense, and this merited testimonial ought with propriety be regarded as coming from the whole nation.

Circumstances of the last two months, which I referred in a late letter, having brought the whole subject of the theory and methods of life insurance again up foremost in the press and in the public mind, the statements of the various companies which January, as usual, brings forth, are once more objects of interest and study and comparison. On the whole they show that the leading companies have held their own very encouragingly, and a few of them have even made considerable additions to their surplus. In one case, that of the Ætna of Hartford, this increase amounts to almost a million of dollars net for the year. Of course this is exceptional, but it shows what honesty and persistent conservatism of management will do in even the most unpropitious times. This principle of conservatism, the only true one to govern the management of trust funds, is in the Ætna so far removed from "old fogyism" as it is from imprudence, and has given that company a position which it would be faint praise to call enviable.

In spite of a good many recent losses, fire insurance, too, seems to be in a good condition. A report just published of the present value of shares in city companies, shows that out of fifty-seven companies reported, the stock of only ten is quoted below par, while shares in some of the remaining forty-seven is purchasable only at an advance of 800 to 1,000 per cent. upon their face value.

Although there are still in progress quite a number of matches and walking mania, which has raged so furiously here this winter seems to be on the wane. Madame Anderson's successful performance was the climax. Since then another young woman entered for another and still more protracted jaunt, which was liberally advertised by full length colored posters and the like, in the expectation of making piles of money for her backers, but she broke down in a few days, and the affair fizzled out. Amusement hunters and sporting men have thus been forced to seek other excitement and have found it in the great billiard tournament at the Cooper Union, and in the noble amusement of cock fighting, which is now assiduously pursued wherever the police can be evaded. A more peaceful interest in birds is developed at the Aquarium, where a really fine pigeon show is now in progress. The number and variety of these beautiful fowls displayed is as surprising as it is pleasing. On the last three afternoons of the week crowds were attracted to witness the flight of large flocks of trained carrier pigeons, which were liberated and dispersed to different destinations.

The hugh and cry about sugar adulteration, the curious and rather disgraceful rise and progress of which I have previously chronicled, has finally died away into silence. It was expensively started and expensively sustained for a little while, but lacking the necessary foundation of truth, it could not prevail. The Board of Health has just sent a communication to the Chamber of Commerce, in which it curtly snubs the would be alarmists, and dismisses the subject in these words: "In the opinion of the Board, there is not at present sufficient cause to justify apprehensions on the part of the public of ill effects from the use of refined sugars, and it does not appear to be necessary to discriminate between raw and refined sugars, for both are wholesome articles of food."

Democracy and Tyranny.

Written for the Sentinel.

If Northern Democrats, within themselves, would be governed by reason, and not surrender their judgment and understanding to the double tyranny of authority from the South, and blind party fealty within, they would soon discern how fatal to the rights of citizenship are the favors, vindication and support which they extend to Democratic tyranny of the South. But Northern Democracy being the natural slaves to the old masters of the late oligarchy, no wonder that they strive so much to have the Republic continually governed by the external and internal vicious rule by which they are governed themselves. Northern Democracy is indeed to be pitied; for it stands in the presence of its Southern prince and lawgiver, dumb as an ass at a public sale, and not one of its so called leaders dare denounce Carolina's last insult to the Federal flag, or pronounce the panegyric so richly deserved by those who have been slain for the only reason that they loved the Union, the Republic, and the laws! Indeed, the Democratic party love neither true liberty nor freedom under law, but the bloody license which never had greater scope or more indulgence than under the present reign of Democratic tyranny of the South. Southern rulers of "National Democracy" permit their Northern servile muddills to select one from their filthy ranks for President, who excels all others in eating Southern dirt, as well as for his sublime emotional sympathy for the "lost cause" of the "patriotic heroes" of the late rebellion, and for the full and complete indemnity of Southern losses during the late civil war, he is to stand unalterably fixed and pledged. Nothing so terrifies and offends the red shirted brigands of Democracy as to hear honorable mention of the name of that pre eminent hero who routed and quelled the chivalry of the South, with all their boasted claims to hereditary State prerogatives, and established the hereditary rights of our great Republic—the Union of the States

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this. If you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Cheever, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Charlevoix ss. At a session of the Probate Court for said county, held at the Probate Office, in the village of Charlevoix on the 30th day of Dec., in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight.

Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of Joseph Sayspeckeyah deceased. On reading and filing the petition duly verified of Reuben Wells Administrator of said estate, praying for reasons therein set forth, for an order to sell certain real estate therein described. Thereupon it is ordered, that Friday, the tenth day of January, next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition and that the heirs at law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court then to be holden at the Probate Office in the village of Charlevoix and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted. And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the heirs at law and all other persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county, three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

It is thought that the Arrears-of-Pensions bill, lately signed by the President, and now a law, will increase the expenditures of a large amount of money. The estimates range from $10,000,000 to $100,000,000—the former being the estimate of Senator Ingalls, and the latter that of Secty Sherman.

The Nez Perces, through Chief Joseph, have ceded 1,800 sqfare miles of land in Idaho to the United States, receiving therefor six townships in the Indian Territory and $390,000 in cash. This last amount is to be invested in United States 4 per cents, and deposited in the Treasury in trust for the Nez Perces.

G. N. Sayles, of Danville, and S. L. & T. D. Sayles, of Versailles, Ohio, the largest individual woolen manufacturers in the United States, failed on the 3d. Liabilities about $1,000,000.

The National Bank circulation outstanding, on the 1st, amounted to $322,830,360. The amount on deposit as security for circulating notes was $345,989,350.

John C. Hulbert, ex-County Judge, and late President of the suspended First National Bank of Saratoga Springs, has been arrested and held to bail in the sum of $10,000 to answer to the charge of embezzlement.

H. A. McIntyre, a Lake City (Col.) banker, has been sentenced to five years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary at Lincoln, Neb., for making false entries in his books. He was tried in the United States Court at Denver.

Advices received in Washington, on the 6th, discredit all former reports about Sitting Bull having recrossed the Canadian border into this country.

A number of delegates from Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri and Kansas assembled in St. Louis, on the 6th, and organized the "Mississippi Valley Cane-Growers' Association." John Walker, of Missouri, was chosen President; J. A. Hedges, of St. Louis, Corresponding Secretary; George Longman, Recording Secretary; E. W. Douglass, Treasurer; G. W. Belcher, of St. Louis, Expert. Mr. Belcher exhibited a sample of sugar made in Minnesota, and pronounced it equal to the best New Orleans sugar, and worth in bulk five cents per pound.

The Secretary of the Treasury, on the 6th, issued another call for $20,000,000 of 5-20 bonds, interest and principal payable May 6.

A recent circular from the Agricultural Department conveys the following information: The crop of corn for the year 1878 was 1,000,000,371 bushels, an increase over the crop of 1877 of 29,000,000, but worth $44,000,000 less; the wheat crop was larger in 1878 than in 1877 by 57,000,000 bushels, but its aggregate value was $60,000,000 less.

Four Deputy United States Marshals made an attack upon a party of moonshiners in Patrick County, Va., on the 6th. The latter were fortified, and resisted. A fight ensued, which lasted two hours, in which two moonshiners were badly wounded. The remaining three left their posts and commenced a retreat, when four or five moonshiners, led by one Lineburg, came to their aid, and drove off the Government officers, and badly wounded two of them.

The agricultural report, recently issued at Washington, gives the average price of the cotton crop for the whole country at 8¼ cents a pound; the value of the crop for 1878 was $194,700,000. The average price of tobacco was 6 7-10 cents; total crop of 1878, estimated at 393,000,000 pounds, worth $22,000,000. Horses increased 3 per cent., but the price very materially decreased. Cows show an increase in nearly all the States, and sheep increased nearly 5 per cent. The prices for hogs have been ruinously low, while the increase is about 5 per cent. Mules increased about 2 per cent.

A billiard tournament in New York City closed on the 7th, with Jacob Shaefer as champion player of the United States, and winner of the $1,000 prize. In the last game between him and George Slosson, the latter made a run of 454, but the former won the game, the averages being 555-7 and 91-467.

William H. Heath, Auditor of St. Louis County, Mo., from 1866 to 1876, has been convicted of the embezzlement of $143,000 of the public funds, and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

The proprietors of a skating rink at Worcester, Mass., have recently been prosecuted for not allowing colored men to skate on their ice.

A number of Cheyenne Indian prisoners from Fort Robinson, Neb., arrived at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., on the 8th, under a strong cavalry guard. They would be turned over to the State authorities for trial for raiding, threatening and murdering citizens in Western Kansas last fall.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

On the 3d, the Brooklyn Presbytery voted to investigate Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D. The resolutions adopted say Mr. Talmage is charged with falsehood and deceit, and with using improper methods in preaching.

On the 3d, announcement was made of the death, in the hospital at Boston, of Richard Henry Dana, the distinguished poet and essayist. He was ninety-three years old.

In a case before the United States Circuit Court, at Baltimore, Md., on the 3d, of a policeman who was called to answer an indictment charging him with having blot-box stuffing at the late Congressional election, a general demurrer was entered and sustained by the Court, alleging that under the statutes of the United States stuffing a ballot-box is not a penal offense.

On the 3d, in the United States Senate, the nominees of the President for Collector and Naval Officer of the Port of New York were confirmed—the former by a vote of 33 to 24, and the latter by a vote of 31 to 18.

President Hayes, on the 5th, nominated Algernon S. Badger to be Collector of Customs, at New Orleans, vice G. L. Smith, to be removed, and W. S. McMillan to be Postmaster, vice Badger.

The following is the full text of the resolutions introduced by Senator Edmunds and adopted by the United States Senate, on the 5th:

Resolved, As the judgment of the Senate, that the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States have been legally ratified, and are as valid and of the same paramount authority as any other part of the Constitution, that the people of each State have a common interest in the enforcement of the whole Constitution in every part of the Union, and that it is alike the right and duty of Congress to enforce said amendments, and to protect every citizen in the exercise of the rights thereby secured, by laws of a general character already passed for that purpose, and by further appropriate legislation, so far as such enforcement and protection are not secured in existing laws, and that it is the duty of the Executive Department of the Government faithfully, and with diligence, to carry all such laws into impartial execution, and of Congress to supply all moneys needful for that purpose.

Resolved, further, That it is the duty of Congress to provide by law for the fullest inquiry into the conduction of all elections of the United States lawfully enacted in the right to such representatives in Congress, and to this end the Committees on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, constituted a standing committee with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to report all facts touching the conduct of such elections, and the manner of the returns and certificates of the same, and to report at the next session of Congress such laws as may be necessary and proper to secure the purity and freedom of such elections.

The Boston Journal and other influential Eastern newspapers do not accept the conclusion of the detectives that Barron, the late Cashier of the Dexter (Me.) Savings Bank, committed suicide because he was a defaulter to a large amount. Mrs. Barron, the wife of the late Cashier, denounces the conclusion as an outrage upon the memory of her dead husband, and declares she will not rest until the imputation be removed.

A United States Grand Jury at New Orleans has found indictments against twenty-five persons in Caddo, Tensas, Natchitoches and Orleans Parishes, for violation of the Election laws.

On the 6th, Hon. N. P. Banks, Member of Congress from Massachusetts, was nominated by the President to be United States Marshal for the District of Massachusetts.

At New Orleans, on the 6th, Judges Billings and Woods, of the United States Court, rendered a decision overruling the demurrer of the prisoners indicted for violation of the Election laws of the United States in the late election. Prisoners claimed that the indictments were not properly drawn, and that some of which M. Thomas Chatham, of Louisiana, had been passed to provide for ascertaining the number of Senators and Representatives in the several States, and the apportionment among them from time to time according to the respective Enumerations of the inhabitants of the several States, and Colorado, Utah, and the States of Nevada and Colorado. A joint resolution was introduced and referred providing for a special treaty with Mexico. A long Executive session was held, devoted to the consideration of the Presidential nominations for the New York Collector of Customs and Naval Officer. Mr. Edmunds spoke in favor of confirmation, and minority reports were made in the Committee on Commerce—Messrs. Conkling and Platt against, the majority report favoring Finley, and the nomination was confirmed.

In the Senate, on the 6th, the bill to provide for taking the Tenth and subsequent Censuses was passed. A resolution was also agreed to instructing the Committee on Agriculture to inquire in regard to the reports concerning infectious diseases among horned cattle. A message was received from the President inclosing the report of the Secretary of State in regard to the proceedings of the International Monetary Conference held at Paris in August, 1878. He hopes a bill will soon be passed making appropriations for the payment of the expenses incurred by the Government of France. A resolution was adopted calling on the Commissioner of Pensions for statements in relation to the amount required to pay arrears of pensions. The Army Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The Senate and House bills to restrict the immigration of Chinese to this country were reported in the Senate, on the 7th. The House bill to relieve certain political disabilities of ex-men, providing that any women who shall have been a member of the highest court of any State or Territory or of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, for the space of three years, and shall have acquired a good standing before such court, and shall be a person of good moral character, shall, on motion and the production of such record, be admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States, was passed without amendment—the N. P. bill in the House, the Senate amendments to the Naval Appropriation bill were non-concurred in, the Conference report on the Indian Appropriation bill was agreed to, and further conference was ordered on the Fortification Appropriation bill. Several private bills were passed.

The credentials of James D. Walker, Senator-elect from Arkansas, were presented in the senate, on the 8th. Conference reports on the Indian Appropriation bill and on the bill to abolish the Volunteer army, were agreed to, and the bills were passed. New Conference Committees were appointed on the Naval and Fortification Appropriation bills. The House bill providing for pensions to officers and soldiers of the Mexican War of the first act of July 29, 1848, was amended and passed. The House bill to amend the act of March 3, 1875, was amended and passed. The House bill to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in lieu of lost or destroyed United States notes, with an amendment, Mr. Edmunds' resolutions on the subject of the Constitutional Amendments were further considered. The Army appropriation bill was considered in the Committee of the Whole, and motions to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the Army from $25,000,000 to $20,000,000 were severally defeated and the bill was passed. It was also agreed to pass over.

Consideration of the resolutions of Mr. Edmunds, declaring the validity of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution, was resumed in the Senate, on the 8th, and, after a lengthy debate, and the rejection of propositions amendatory and substitutes, the resolutions were finally agreed to—37 to 19—as follows: Yeas—Anthony, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron (Pa.), Cameron (Wis.), Christiancy, Conkling, Dawes, Edmunds, Kellogg, Kirkwood, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill (Me.), Morrill (Vt.), Paddock, Pierce, Rollins, Spencer, Teller and Windom—37. Nays—Bailey, Bayard, Beck, Coke, Davis (W. Va.), Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Kernan, Lamar, Maxey, Morgan and Voorhees—19. Messrs. Allison, Blaine, Booth, Chaffee, Conover, Dorsey, Hamlin, Patterson, Christiancy, Dorsey, Matthews, Jones (Nev.), Sargent, Saulsbury, Wallace and Withers would have voted yea were paired with Messrs. Donald, Dennis, Jones (Fla.), McPherson, Thurman, Jonas and Ransdell, for and with Withers, who would have voted in the negative. The Senate then took up the bill to amend the Revised Statutes relating to the Army Appropriation bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole, and minority reports were made in the Committee on Appropriations in favor of and against the majority report favoring Finley, and the nomination was confirmed.

In the House, on the 7th, Mr. Foster, of Illinois, called attention to the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in relation to the Panama Canal, and moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill. Mr. Randall objected, and the bill went over. The Senate bill to provide for the payment of the expenses incurred by the Government of France in the Centennial Exhibition was passed

BEAVER ISLAND.

A Chapter of News and Gossip From Our Island Neighbors.

Beaver Island, Jan. 2, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

So much has occurred since mail day two weeks. A mail left here on the 20th of December for Mackinac, and arrived there the nine o'clock. The mail carrier, whose name I cannot call to mind at present, made the trip on foot, a distance of about forty miles, and returned the next day. When near Waugoshance light house, and passed the night there. The next morning, which was the 23d, was ushered in with a blizzard from the north, which point they reached. They remained at Point until January 11, when they started to go to Cross Village to get their mail, but on account of the intense cold they were compelled to return to Point Patterson, where they stayed until January 13th, when they started on the ice with a dog sleigh, having their mail. They crossed over to Grassy and started for Petoskey, on the north shore, which point they reached. They remained at Petoskey until January 17, when they started on the ice to return to this place. Meeting a large Cook on the ice, they cut off a large cake and packed the mail across the remaining. After a few miles travel their dog sleigh broke down, and they were compelled to carry the mail bag, weighing nearly 100 pounds, on their shoulders, together with their blankets and provisions. On the evening of the 11th, when near Hyt Island, they saw open water ahead. They camped there that night, and on the morning of the 12th, they piled their bundle and the mail bag on the top of one of the numerous hills of ice, and taking a bag containing provisions and an axe, they started to find some way out. When about a mile away from the mail-bag, the wind blowing fresh, the ice parted and several large fields of ice commenced moving. They were on a field about a mile wide and as far as the eye could reach in length. The mail-bag and bundle being on another field, they could see them on the ice-hill in the distance, looking like a couple of men. They were blown on Lake Michigan, on a field of ice! With no one to know but they would have been carried over to Manitou Island, and from there to Fox Island, where they could get provisions, and from there to the mainland. Fortunately for them, the wind changed, and blew from the south-west, which carried them back again, and finally striking against the shore to the west of Hog Island on the evening of January 23d. They made a jump and soon reached Hog Island, where they camped for the night. The next morning they crossed over on the ice to Garden Island, where they rested three days with friends, arriving home on the evening of the 26th, having spent eleven days and ten nights on the ice, sleeping in ice and snow-bins, but having no blankets, although they were well clothed for a trip on that kind. The men, Joseph Smith and Paul Leblanc, are old citizens, and are known as honest, truthful men.

The mail contractor and our post master are getting a heat built, in which Messrs. Miller, Ingford and Leblanc will start in a day or two in search of the missing mail, and, if possible, bring another mail also. Their boat will be constructed of half-inch lumber, with a train de glisse attached to it, so that it can be used as a sledge on ice as well. It will be large enough to carry five men, and will weigh less than 100 pounds. It would pay the English Government to get some of our paper tender to come to find the remains of Sir John Franklin.

On New Year's day, three Indians who were coming west near Davis Harbor, High Island, crossed over in a sled about a mile wide and as far as the eye could reach in length. The mail-bag and bundle being on another field, they could see them on the ice-hill in the distance, looking like a couple of men. They were about on Lake Michigan, on a field of ice! With no one to know but they would have been carried over to Manitou Island, and from there to Fox Island, where they could get provisions, and from there to the mainland. Fortunately for them, the wind changed, and blew from the south-west, which carried them back again, and finally striking against the shore to the west of Hog Island on the evening of January 23d. The Crops.

The following interesting statistics are taken from a recent report by the Commissioner of Agriculture, on the condition of the crops and the past and present yield and prices of grain, etc., in this country:

The crop of corn in 1877 was the largest ever raised in this country up to that date, having been 1,342,000,000 bushels, valued at $480,000,000. The crop of 1878 exceeded it in bushels, but the over production brought the price much lower, and the crop, which was 1,391,000,000 bushels, is only valued at $448,-241,000.

The 10 cot State averages are in Iowa and Nebraska, both of which States increased their products very largely, too great for home consumption, and too remote from leading markets; the price has fallen to about one-half it was in 1876. The States showing the highest average price are the Gulf States, from Georgia to Texas, where the consumption fully equals the crop, and where the prices are less than those of last year. The price per bushel, returned December, 1878, was 51.9; in 1877, 58.3 cents.

The average price of wheat for the year 1878 was $1.01 per bushel; for the year 1877, stimulated by war in Europe, the increased crop was worth $1.09. For the year 1878, an increase of upwards of 86,000,000 bushels, the price had fallen to 78 cents per bushel on Dec. 1, 1878.

The crop of 1878, which amounts to 420,-300,000 bushels, is worth only $329,000,000; while the crop of 1877, which was 365,000,000 bushels, was worth $394,000,000.

In the case of wheat, the price is greatly influenced by the European demand. For the year ending June 30, 1878, it was found that we exported 97,000,000 bushels of wheat (flour included), about 25 per cent. of our whole crop.

From estimates published by the Board of Trade and the Mark Lane Express, of England, it is ascertained that the supply of Europe will be short 13,000,000 quarters, equal to 107,000,000 bushels, of that amount to be imported. Last year the amount imported was 15,000,000 quarters, or 120,000,000 bushels. This supply was mainly drawn from the United States and will be this year. From the estimates in France, published in the Bulletin des Halles, the wheat crop of 1878 is placed at 81,500,000 hectolitres, or 230,000,000 bushels, being 18,000,000 hectolitres, or 36,000,000 bushels, less than that of 1877, which was a poor crop.

The amount imported into France in 1877-78 was 23,000,000; the amount needed this year must approximate 30,000,000 bushels. The same bulletin, estimating the sources of supply abroad, says: "The utmost surplus from Russia for export will be 50,000,000 bushels; from Hungary, 17,000,000; and the only other source of supply of importance is the United States."

The following statement of prices in some of the prominent wheat-growing States since 1874 will fairly illustrate the range of prices in those years:

States.	1874.	1875.	1876.	1877.	1878.
Ohio	81.04	81.09	81.14	81.24	80.86

Kansas	84	87	86	92	67
Nebraska	70	80	80	87	60

From returns made in December, 1878, we find the average price of potatoes to be 58.7 cents per bushel. With a corresponding period with that of 1876, we have a price much lower per bushel, and a total value of much less than that year. With a crop some 45,000,000 bushels less than the latter year, the value does not equal that of the preceding year by $5,000,000. The following is a table of product, price per bushel, and total value for the last four years:

Year.	Product.	Price per bu.	Value.
1878	170,279,000	58.7	$99,978,000
1877	124,805,000	69.5	85,960,000
1876	170,000,000	58.8	99,875,000
1875	124,027,000	56.8	70,103,000

Diamond Stealing.

A few days since a St. Louis reporter spent an entire afternoon in the private office of a well-known Fourth-street diamond-dealer, and listened with rapt attention to reminiscences and recollections of diamond robberies, successful and attempted.

"Begining here in St. Louis, for instance," said the dealer, "I remember a case that, while not strictly speaking a robbery, has certain unmistakable features. I sold a solitaire ring for five hundred dollars to a lady living in Lucas place. About a year afterward a man walked into my place and throwing down a ring, asked me what it was worth. I at once recognized it as the one I had sold, and I questioned the man very closely. He claimed to have come by it honestly. I talked for a long time, and at last told my clerk to get a policeman.

"Before the clerk got out of the store the man let down completely, and told me that he was a plumber; that three months before he had been called to a house in Lucas place, to fix a water-pipe which was stopped up. He found the ring in a pipe, said nothing about it, and waited three months before to give the loss time to blow over. Strange that he should come to my place, the only one in the city where the ring would be recognized. He saw that he was found out, made the best of the job, returned the ring, and secured a reward of two hundred dollars."

One day a respectable-looking gentleman with a young lady, to all appearance his wife, came into the diamond-dealer's place and spent several hours looking at diamonds. One cross and earrings, valued at $5,000, seemed to strike the young wife's eye. The husband demurred at the price. The wife playfully coaxed him to buy. "Well, well, I will think about it," said he, as they departed without buying.

The next day the woman drove up in a coupe, and said: "My husband desires to see those diamonds again. I think he will buy. He is sick in bed, and will you go to the Southern with me, or send a clerk?"

Warned by a previous bitter experience, involving a loss of $1,000, the dealer did not send a clerk, but went himself. The people had a suite of parlors on the second floor. The young lady was quite engaging. Her husband was asleep. Would the gentleman wait a few momentsf He would. The lady was unusually interesting, and, always susceptible to charming woman, the time passed agreeably to the diamond-dealer. The young lady got up and entered the inner apartment, but returned immediately with the announcement that her husband was awake. With the sweetest affectation of enthusiasm, she picked up the case containing the jewels, and, with "Let me show them to my husband," disappeared within.

The door seemed accidentally to blow shut. The diamond-merchant jumped up, and as he did so he heard a key turn in the lock. He at once recognized what was up, and sprang to the door opening to the hall. He found it locked. He was a prisoner. The solid door mocked him. He was desperate. In an instant he drew his revolver, placed it to the lock, fired; it was shattered, and the door swung open to his touch. Like a madman he tore along the halls, down the stairs, through the rotunda and around to the ladies' entrance, just as a lady in a carriage gave the order, "Relay Depot, East St. Louis."

He leaned into the window of the carriage and said: "Will your husband take the diamonds, madam?"

She gave him one long, searching look, and then quietly said: "The price is too large, and then they are much hard things to keep;" precisely the case from the recesses of her muff and handed it to him, saying: "I should have been quicker." Spyer looked at the diamonds, saw that they were all right and bade the young woman good-day. Within the hour she and her confederate had left the hotel.

Since then the dealer has never let a diamond leave his hand for more than two seconds. The idea is just this: Two smart thieves can afford to work a couple of years to make a haul of $10,000. Take, for instance, the traveling diamond-merchants, who carry with them from $200,000 to $60,000 worth of gems. The chances are that no one of them ever leaves New York without he is shadowed by some adroit thief, who lives in the same hotel with him, rides on the same train, sleeps in the same Pullman, rides in the same omnibus from the depot, waiting for a chance to possess himself of the small sachel or case that is the burden of the drummer's life.

New Cotton Dress Goods.

A quaint novelty among cotton goods for spring and summer dresses is called mummy cloth, and resembles in its rough, crinkled surface the texture of cloth upon which tidies and covers are embroidered. The choice designs come in soft, faded colors, such as pale blue with olive in stripes, one of which has sprays of flowers upon it. Some have two or three shades of olive foliage forming stripes; others have ivory and moss stripes, or else blue and pink sprays. The merchants test these cotton by having them washed—not with great care, but as they say, "washed to fade"—and these washed samples are shown to purchasers to prove that the stylish-faded colors are as faded as they ever will be. This mummy cloth is a yard wide; fourteen yards are sold for a short simple dress.

Coteline is a stiff, half-transparent cotton fabric woven in longthwise reps or cords and made to very durable. It comes in coal clean patterns of a blue-green or a gray-blue spray on white, or in chine colors on cream grounds, or in stripes of the favorite Sevres blue with olive green. The satteens show small and narrow shades in chints figures and in stripes.

Printed armures are also new cotton goods. The white ground has raised threads like the brilliantine formerly worn, and is strewn with pale-tinted flowers and foliage. The zephyrs are Scotch ginghams made by Glasgow houses in contrasting colors for plaids and stripes, such as pink barred with blue, or blue with green, or red with white and black. The Scotch tartans are also shown in these goods. A great deal of the Russian braid lace is being imported to trim those pretty zephyr ginghams.—Harper's Bazar.

Pay as You Go.

The best of all rules for successful housekeeping and making both ends of the year meet is "pay as you go." Beyond all countries in the world, ours is the one in which the credit system is the most used and abused. Pass-books are the bane and pest of domestic economy, a perpetual plague, vexation and swindle. Allowing servants on the store and the house, disputed constantly by housekeepers and dealers, they are temptations to both parties to do wrong. "I never had that!" "We neglected to enter this." "I forgot to bring the book?" "Never mind, we'll make a note of it," and so it goes. But the worst of it is that housekeepers are tempted to order what they have not the means to pay for, and when the month or quarter comes for settlement they are straitened. A family can live respectably on a very moderate income, if they always take the cash in hand and buy where they can buy to the best advantage. Then they will be careful first to get what is necessary. Extra comforts will be had as they can afford them. But it is bad policy to buy on credit. No wise dealer sells so cheaply on credit as for cash.

The table is the place for economy. Good wholesome food costs little compared with unwholesome luxuries.

The dress of a family is so much a matter of taste that it need hardly be said that it is as easy to be respectable in clothing that cost little, as in that which is expensive. To dress according to one's means is the only respectable style.

One must have a home, and in every place there are dwellings suited to the ability of the tenant or purchaser. When the rent, the food and the clothing are kept within one's income, the margin for benevolence, for luxury and for pleasure may be measured and used. In these as in other matters, "pay as you go."

Having made no debts to shops or stores, and especially having paid servants, workmen and workwomen promptly their dues, it is well also to carry out the same punctuality and caution in donations. If you would endow a professorship, and have the means, do so; but do not give your note for it, promising to pay interest. That is not an endowment; it is your promise to make it such. If your circumstances are changed by the force of events beyond your control, you cannot redeem your promise. We can point to many colleges, seminaries and other institutions falsely supposed to be endowed, and the basis proved to be promises worth no more than the scrap of paper on which they are written.

In all things, "pay as you go." Keep out of debt as you would out of prison. Try this plan through the year 1879, and see how well it has worked when you review the subject in the beginning of 1880.—N. Y. Observer.

The Pet Boy in College.

I had not been home many hours; the female members of the family had not exclaimed more than a thousand times, "Why, Fred, how you have changed! I'd hardly know you!" my younger brother had only just succeeded in smashing my first cane, when word was brought that, "Your father would like to see you in the study, Mr. Fred."

"Ah, Fred, my boy, sit down and tell me how you are getting on at Harvard."

"O, first rate! I played foot-ball all the fall, am training this winter for the crew and think of base-ball in the spring."

"Yes, yes; but, Fred, how about the Greek and Latin?"

"O, they're all right; I'm in the advance section for both studies."

"I am very glad to hear it; for, Fred, I've been a little worried by two notices I received from the college, something about your doing so poorly in Greek and Latin examinations."

"Did you really get such letters, father? That's immense! Why, they're Deturs!"

"Eh?"

"Why, Deturs, gifts from the college. From the Latin, do, dare, dedi, detum, to give. The college gives them only to the twenty best scholars in the class. It's a great honor to get one; fellows that get Detors hang them up in frames. You hardly ever get Detors more than once, unless he is superb, equal to getting a double first at Oxford."

"Indeed! I always thought you were bright, Fred; but what does it mean by saying if you don't do better you will have to steer your connection with the college?"

"Pooh! That's nothing, father, a mere form; relic of an old custom. You see, about a hundred years ago the twenty best men of the class used to contend in an examination for the first place. The nineteen who didn't win were told that they might go away into the country, that is, sever their connection with the college for a while, study hard and come back next spring. The custom has died out, but the notices remain, and now they are sent round to show that you are in the first twenty of your class. A great honor to get one, I assure you."

"I am glad of it; you have taken quite a load off my mind, for I feared that you were in danger of dismissal. Well, Fred, I won't detain you longer, your sisters are dying to know all about college; but before you go here's a specimen of specie payments from me as a Detur for your good work in Latin and Greek."—Harvard Crimson.

The Manufacture of Sewing and Floss Silk.

Twenty years ago the manufacture of silk goods in the United States was confined to sc few firms and limited to such small amounts, that it was hardly to be classed among the industries of the country. Since about 1860 we have been brought into closer commercial relations with China and Japan, and their silk-producing countries, of the world, which has given silk manufacture a powerful impetus. American manufacturers discovered that their goods could rival those of European production in quality as well as price, and consumers found it to their advantage to patronize the home industry. Statistics could be given which would show the immense increase of American silk stuffs and the corresponding decrease of imported silks, but as the purpose of this article is to describe the process of manufacturing, they must be omitted.

The raw silk is imported in bales, each containing twenty bundles or "books." These weigh from five to eight pounds each, and are made up of a number of skeins. They are broken open and the skeins assorted according to the fineness of fiber; this is done entirely by touch and very rapidly. Orders for grades of silk consist of three sizes; the finer qualities only two. The fiber is exceedingly fine, translucent, of a white or yellow color, and very tough.

After the skeins are sorted they are soaked for three hours in a tank of soap and hot water, to remove the natural gum and the adulterating substances which are added to increase the weight. This adulteration is sometimes equal to one-fourth of the entire weight. The silk is dried in a centrifugal drier without rinsing, as it is found that the presence of a small quantity of soap facilitates the handling of the material. It now goes to the reeling machine. Each of these contains thirty spools and reels. The skeins are placed upon the latter and rapidly spooled. Each machine has a single attendant who, after long practice, shows wonderful dexterity in untangling and tying the delicate fiber.

To a casual observer, raw silk appears to be regular and to possess a perfectly smooth surface; this is, however, not the case; it is uneven, and contains many scales and projecting fibres, which must be removed before the silk can be twisted. This important process of cleaning consists simply in running the fiber through a pair of sharp and nicely adjusted semicircular knives. It is now ready to be considered as form the thread. Three or more fibers, the number varying with the size of thread desired, are reeled together on a spool, which, in another machine, is rapidly revolved as the silk is wound off; this process twists it loosely together. The operation of doubling and twisting is repeated, and the thread is now made, though several processes are still necessary to finish it. The first of these is stretching, as operation in which one gates and tightens the twist, at the same time squeezing out the soap which has been left in the fiber, and are willing to accept anything that will afford them a living. Going into a tank of hot water, it is again wet and reeled from one to the other.

It now undergoes the most delicate operation in the entire process of manufacture—that of dyeing. Those who delight in artistically combining the soft tints of floss silk into beautiful embroideries little think of the wonderful skill and care which is necessary to produce those tints. Primary colors must be combined, the most delicate shades must be perfectly matched, and the faultless gradations of color, which blend so harmoniously in the same skein, must be most carefully chosen with reference to the general effect. The beautiful aniline are largely used and the skeins of silk, hung upon long, wooden rods, are suspended in the tubdye. A large amount of the liquid is now extracted in the centrifugal drier, and the remainder in the drying-room. The dye contained in the thread makes it stiff and harsh, and to restore its natural softness and pliability it must be "wrung." A sturdy operative hangs the skein upon a strong, perforated iron cylinder, inserts a similar bar, and twists the thread, turning it until all parts have been subjected to the same pressure.

After picking out the loose bits it is wound on large spools, and is now ready for the spooling room. The spool, which is about 3 inches long, is placed on a spindle, the thread wound on it by a rapidly moving, horizontal which will be described hereafter, is placed on a spindle, the thread wound on some spools and in others in a rapid revolution. As the silk runs on the spool it passes through a guide in front of a sliding arm, which is moved regularly back and forth by a revolving screw; this screw has the same pitch as the tightly wound thread is chosen, and the allowance being made for the difference in speeds, and the silk is consequently run on with perfect evenness and smoothness. When filled the spool is stopped and the thread cut and fastened. The entire operation takes but a few seconds. The spools are now ready for shipment, and also in lots of one dozen, in order to correct any inaccuracy in amount. All that remains is to place them in neat paper boxes, and they are ready for shipping.

The larger part of the spools used are labeled by stamping directly on their ends, in one or more colors. This, besides causing a large saving in expense over the paper label, insures the preservation of the label. The spools are fed between a pair of inked metal rolls, engraved deep upon them, which print the design a sixty-fourth of an inch below the surface. When two colors are used a second pair of rolls become necessary.—Scientific American.

A Lawyer's Fee.

A case was recently pending in one of the courts in Chicago against a lawyer by one of his clients, showing that the plaintiff had placed in the hands of the defendant, the said lawyer, for collection, a demand against a third party for $75. The demand was collected by the lawyer on presentation. But his client called on him for the amount collected, the lawyer answered that there was nothing coming to him; that the amount collected was barely sufficient to cover his fees in the case. The client thereupon sued the lawyer for the amount, $75. At one trial the latter interposed a set-off of $73.25. Among the items were four "consultations," $20; trying the case, $15; looking up some records, $20; a commission on the amount collected, $17.75; and sundry items. This made a total of $73.25, or 25 cents more than the amount of the original debt. The Court allowed the attorney $10 for collecting the sum. The lawyer, it appears, is a young man, and states that he made up his bill on the advice of older practitioners, and that he probably did not correctly state the facts.—Legal Adviser.

ENGINEERS of steamships have found that the best lubricants are glycerine for the cylinders and castor-oil for the bearings. When castor-oil is used the main bearings seldom become heated. Only the best glycerine can be employed with advantage, but when it is of a high grade the results leave little to be desired.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—One of the most recent hypotheses of the origin of petroleum is that advanced by M. Mendeleieff. Starting with the nebular hypothesis, he regards the interior of the earth as metallic, doubtless composed largely of iron and carbides of iron; through rents made by earthquakes, water gained access to these bodies at a high temperature and under great pressure, and, by their mutual chemical action, metallic oxides and saturated hydrocarbons resulted. It is these latter, according to M. Mendeleieff, which, carried by watery vapor, have spread themselves through the overlying rocks.

—Prof. Lockyer thinks that human life on the planet Mars may be very much like human life on the earth. Although the light cannot be so bright, yet the organs of sight of the inhabitants may be so much more susceptible as to make their vision quite as good as ours. Probably the heat on Mars is less than on the earth, as the polar snows extend further toward the equator; but it is by no means in proportion to the lessened power of the solar rays. Several remarkable seas are now definable in the Southern Hemisphere, where, as in the case of the Southern Hemisphere of the earth, there appears a much larger area than in the Northern Hemisphere. One of the Southern Seas of Mars is very like the Adriatic in outline. Another sea near the equator is one thousand miles in length and about one hundred in breadth—a long, straggling body of water, pretty much the shape of the letter S laid on its back, stretching from east to west.

—Mr. E. J. Lowe, the astronomer, in a letter to the London Times, mentions a curious instance of the value of small birds in agriculture: "Thirty-five years ago a countryman left here for Australia, taking with him all our popular hardy fruits and vegetables; but the produce was nearly destroyed until the English sparrow was introduced, after which there was plenty of fruit. The writer remembers a single pair of sparrows destroyed as many grubs in one day as would have made up the number of caterpillars in a week. The swallows, flycatchers and other summer birds come too late to destroy the grubs in the spring, while the birds, like the sparrow, which really do the necessary work. Frost does not kill those grubs. Even in the severe frost of 1860-61, when the thermometer stood in some places eight degrees below zero, the grubs were not injured. Let us, then, encourage the tiny blue under-gardeners, though they do take a certain portion of the produce by way of wages for their work.—Spectator.

—Prof. Thompson, in some remarks before the Glasgow Geological Society on some points in the early formation of the earth, expressed some interesting opinions of the circumstances accordant with the axis of the earth might become changed through geological influences, and the consequences of any such change. The possibility of such a change, said Prof. Thompson, had been adduced to account for the great differences in climate which could be shown to have obtained at different periods in the same portion of the earth's surface; and the question arose whether changes in the earth's axis could account for these changes of climate. In the present condition of the earth, it is admitted that any change in the axis of rotation could not be permanent—though in very early geologic ages, supposing the earth to have been plastic, the yielding of the surface might have made the new axis a principal axis; but certain it is that the earth at present is so rigid that no such change is possible. The professor declares emphatically that changes of climate have not been produced by changes of the earth's axis.

Men Seeking Employment in Kitchens.

Inquiry at several employment offices discloses that frequent applications are received from men for places where they can earn a living by doing such work as is usually done by female domestics; that many have gone out to such service, and that they are, as a rule, giving very good satisfaction. This is no new thing on the Pacific Coast, where Chinamen are frequently found doing the work of domestics. On this side of the Continent, the line between the work done by males and females is not very closely drawn in the subterranean regions of hotels, restaurants, and even of boarding-houses; but the employment of men to a considerable extent in private houses to do the work that has hitherto been done almost entirely by "female help" amounts to a sort of new departure. It is not probable that many of the males who are doing the work of kitchen-girls on this side would acknowledge that they are indebted to the Chinese for the idea; they would rather allow that they were driven to seek such service by the prospect of starvation, consequent upon the extremely "hard times." In most cases where they apply for a situation they ask for such work, they are reduced beyond an inclination to bargain as to the nature of the duties that will fall to them, and are willing to accept anything that will afford them a living. Going into a kitchen in such a frame of mind, the men value their opportunity to earn a living; they are much less independent than the usual run of "female help," and are less ambitious than demanding what were once regarded as privileges, but which that class of help has come to regard as the right. There is a substratum of fact for the indiscriminate exaggeration of satirical weeklies upon the tyranny of the basement and kitchen. The growing scarcity in the number of women who are willing to accept service in a household where they will not be treated as "one of the family," but as hired help, has made it extremely difficult, even for those who are abundantly able to pay, to secure and retain satisfactory domestics in their service; and if the disposition of man and woman is to the animal kingdom. The elements to create commercial salt are about 60 per cent. of chlorine and 40 per cent. of sodium. Yet impure salt contains different quantities of at least a dozen other impure salts. The absence of these impurities is why one salt is better than another.

The salt of the ocean depends on the dissipation of the salts held in solution on land by rains, violence, decomposition and natural decay, and is taken by streams and rivers to the ocean. If by this process more salt is carried to the ocean than its water can hold in solution, it is deposited in deep places and covered by the sediment. And this will account for the vast deposits found in various places on the face of the earth. There are in our Western Territories immense deposits of the purest rock salt, and so soon as railroads can overcome the present impassable mountain barriers they will supply a continental demand. It has been the fortune of the writer to see some magnificent specimens of these salt deposits. In the northwest part of Arizona, in the gorges of the Wasatch Mountains, and canyons of the Uintah tributaries of the Colorado River, and eight hundred or a thousand miles beyond the reach of the Pacific railroads, there are said to be salt deposits cropping out in perpendicular bluffs from one to three hundred feet in height for hundreds of miles in extent. In Texas, also, there are horizontal beds of rock salt. In St. Domingo there are entire mountains of it. There, in the past history of our globe (the remote period of which makes the head dizzy to contemplate), were deposited by the oceans. Upheavals and physical revolutions of the earth have transformed them into dry land and mountain gorges. It is not our object, however, to follow these speculations into the dim and misty past.

Salt pervades earth and water. It pervades all animal foods. In many countries they obtain enough saline matter in grasses and vegetables. In others it is necessary for their health that it should be supplied. It is necessary for the human and animal systems. Stop the supply and blindness would ensue, as well as other physical deficiencies. The health and thrift of cattle, sheep, horses and hogs depend upon a due proportion of salt in their food. This article is written in reply to a query if too much salt is not given to stock. We think frequently too much is given at a time, but it is not given often enough. When taken in right quantities it aids digestion and assimilation, and without it physical development is imperfect and unhealthy.—Iowa State Register.

—This is a good recipe for pork cake: Chop one pound of salt pork (pickled, not smoked.) It must be all fat. Add a pint of boiling water, one pint of New Orleans molasses, one pound of brown sugar, one large tablespoonful each of cinnamon, allspice, cloves and nutmeg, four eggs. Add enough flour to make a stiff dough; do not forget to add one tablespoon of soda to the first of the flour. Also add one pound each of raisins, currants and citron. This makes three large cakes.

The coffee will not boil—only steep at a uniform temperature, and in thirty minutes will be settled clear, and ready for the table. It will not be clear if taken up soon, but it may remain in the kettle for a much longer time without having its flavor impaired.—Mrs. Rend, in Dr. Pratt's Health Monthly for February.

—An experienced tanner is authority for the statement that if leather is kept full of oil, and not suffered to get dry, it will last twice as long. Without it the fibers become brittle and rotten, but with plenty of oil they are tough and durable. This is contrary to the notion some people have that grease rots leather, and so they never oil their boots or harness. Leather should always be dampened before oiling, and thoroughly cleansed, using soap and sponge, if any soap is needed, and a little lampblack mixed with the oil, if necessary to give color.

—A Mutton Stew.—Take three pounds breast or neck of mutton, cut in pieces, put in a saucepan with just enough water to cover, adding a pinch of salt; let it stew gently for one hour, skim off all the fat, and add slice six potatoes and four onions, then sprinkle and put all the ingredients into another stewpan. Night air is fresh air without a chill, then one of meals, and sprinkle seasoning of pepper and savory between each layer; cover closely, and let the whole simmer very slowly for one hour, shaking it frequently to prevent its burning. This is a good dish for a family dinner, and is easily made.

—To prevent rheumatism put away the sheets and counterpane, and sleep in blankets, under and over, and no counterpane at all. The sheets and counterpane do a great deal of mischief. The cotton keeps the sour heat and perspiration from the body in the bed, and so you breathe poisoned air all night, summer and winter, and that poisoned air makes your rheumatism and your linen worse. If you were in blankets they would not absorb the perspiration; it would pass through from one to the other, and out in cotton, if it absorbs it—I had better say soaks into it—there it remains, cold, or hot, or clammy.—Mrs. Warren.

Keeping Accounts.

Farmers and stockmen, who keep a daily account of the hours of labor, expenditures and losses, receipts and income, will succeed better and make more rapid progress in all useful knowledge than their neighbors who trust entirely to memory and judgment in all their relations to these things.

Men of very limited education can keep a set of books by keeping a reliable record of all their business with their stock, their farm and with all their employees.

They should procure for the pocket an ordinary diary, costing from twenty-five to fifty cents. In this they can, from time to time, jot down, date, enter all transactions connected with their income and expenditures. There are pages for special memoranda, cash accounts, etc. These entries should be made on the spot.

At home they will have such books as our stationers furnish for farmers' account, and during rainy days or hours of rest and leisure they will, with pen and ink, post from the diary all things deemed important.

There will be in the ledger, for example, an account opened with the cornfields. He will charge cost of plowing, manure, marking, seed, planting, cultivating, tapping, cutting or gathering, husking, shelling, marketing, etc., or the amount of labor bestowed to bring about these results, and on the opposite page credit the cornfield with its product, in bushels, barrels, etc., and cash, or results obtained in pork, beef, etc.

Accounts should thus be opened and regularly kept with every distinct product; grass, wheat, barley, rye, oats, potatoes, turnips, etc., and with the horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, fruit, etc., expenditures for agricultural implements, wagons, carriages, etc. So with every laborer, and with the household expenses.

The advantages of this care and attention to all the affairs of a farm or plantation, whether devoted to raising stock, grain, grass or roots, will be found more immerous and valuable than, when first suggested, would be deemed possible.

The farmer or stockman, thus carefully keeping before him his expences and income, will soon have in figures and words clear and ample demonstrations of the more or less profitable parts of his farm, flocks, stocks, etc., and in the future govern himself accordingly.

Such farmers, when sent to the Legislature, would be among its most valuable members, and when the great mass of our producers thus accustom themselves to keeping accurate accounts they will not depend so largely as at present on professional politicians, or even the genuine legal profession, for Legislative bills, or the enactment of State and National laws. Our great producers will have—after a few years' careful study of their own business—trained themselves to clearer estimates of the actual needs not only of their own district, but that of the State and Nation.—Drovers' Journal.

To statistics of the Universalist Church during the last year show an increase of 52 parishes, 500 families, 2,670 church members and 20 church edifices in the United States and Canada. There is also a gain of 45 in the number of Sunday-Schools. But there is a falling off of 912 in Sunday-School scholars and 11 in the number of preachers. The number of students in the colleges and academies has also diminished. The denomination has now in the United States 737 churches and 711 ministers.

THE slave trade is being stealthily carried on in the Red Sea, the slaves being taken from Abyssinia to the Arabian Coast.

Remedy for Hard Times.

Stop spending so much on fine clothes, rich food and costly furniture, and spend health-food cheaper and better clothing; get more real and substantial things of life every way and especially stop the foolish habit of running after expensive and quack doctors, or using so much of the vile humbug medicine that does you only harm, and makes the people sicker, poorer and more unfit for the practice of all simple, pure remedies. Hop Bitters, that cures and saves all it recommends, and gives a world of health and good health. Try it once. Read of it in another column.

Advice to Consumptives.

—The celebrated physician, Dr. Paul Memeyer, gives the following valuable suggestions to persons suffering from lung affections:

"The patient must with scrupulous conscientiousness insist upon breathing fresh, pure air, and must remember that the air of closed rooms is always more or less bad.

No man, however uncleanly would drink muddy, dirty water. A party which occupies a room for hours, breathing the same air, might be compared to a party of bathers drinking the water in which they bathe. The patient must keep the window of his bedroom open. Night air is fresh air without a chill, in close, crowded rooms, the patient suffering from lung complaints literally commits suicide by it." By taking these precautions and using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets, fully one-half of the cases of lung complaints would be cured in six months. For cough and irritation of the lungs do not always indicate the presence of consumption, although it may result in that disease, and if consumption has not already become established in the system, this is the most effective course of treatment that can be pursued outside of any institution that provides special facilities for the treatment of this disease. Dr. Pierce's celebrated invaluable Hotel is one such an institution. Send stamp for descriptive pamphlet containing also a complete treatise upon consumption, explaining its causes, nature, and the best methods of treating it, together with valuable hints concerning diet, clothing, exercise, etc., for consumptives. PUBLIC NOTICE.

I, JOHN HANNAH, being a Blacksmith by trade, had often felt the want of some means whereby I could relieve from at the forge, so that I could more fully attend to the anvil. This induced me to make many experiments with different substances which offered the best prospect of success. It was on one of these occasions that I discovered the wonderful effects of Electric Silicone on the human system.

I had a defect in three of my fingers, which were bent at right angle in my hand (a wound, a memento of the construction of the cranks, that they were very troublesome to me in my daily avocation. I could not handle my tools as I wished, and often thought I would have my fingers cut off to get them out of the way. I have used everything that offered any sense of relief, but all to no effect. Well, I say, I was washing with Electric Silicone at the forge, and of course could not prevent its coming in contact with my hands.

I took no notice of the effect it had produced, until one day, wishing to use a heavy hammer, I grasped with my crooked fingers accidentally, and I had no more use of them as ever. I could handle hammer as even I used to with my left hand, and I am now handling the tongs with my right hand.

That a neighbor living about a mile from me who also had a lame finger, applied Electric Silicone to it, and in return for the favor I will also a bottle of Electric Silicone to any one sending me 25 cents in stamps to pay for postage, &c., and at the end of three months I will refund the money if it does not cure. Any one writing me will receive a reply by return mail. I will warrant it to cure in every case where a perfect cure is possible. I have in different parts of the country, and I have never had a case that I could not cure. I have cured a horse of a bad case of scratches, and I have cured myself of a bad case of rheumatism, after being confined to my bed for three months.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, FEB. 25, - - - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Feb 14, 1879

EDITOR SENTINEL.

"The February days have come, the gayest of the year." The grand Charity ball has come and gone, like a methodical annual comet. So has the famous French Cook's ball, where were music and dancing, and above all mazy cycles of beauty and skilled handiwork in sugar and pastry and lard, in accordance with time honored custom. So, too, has the waiters' ball, where, as in former seasons, the merriment took on a "sans-culotte" character—and, I fear Brother Talmage would say, an unorthodox form. The Liederkranz ball, too, perhaps the most famous of periodical revels of the metropolis, transpired on Valentine's Eve at the Academy of Music, amid a blaze of lights, the blare of two gammoth orchestras, banks upon banks of flowers, a vista-ball of beautiful and grotesque costumes, dominos, harlequins, and all other paraphernalia of the reckless but aristocratic rout. St. Valentine himself, moreover, has passed over our heads, dropping upon them in his flight some millions of sentimental missives, not to mention a ton or so of the ingenious caricatures with which the spirative mind is wont to fire the plebeian heart. Just think what an array! And beside all these gayeties, this little undersized month of Febb is to revere for its Washington's Birthday, and the inevitable Martha Washington Reception, which comes in to crown this career of dissipation, and prepare us through sheer exhaustion to welcome the austerities of Lent.

For many years, and especially for the last three years, the exporting of live cattle and meat to Great Britain has been one of the heaviest and most rapidly growing items of our foreign business. Considerable consternation was therefore the natural consequence of a recent cablegram to the effect that strong pressure was being brought on the British Government to compel it to forbid the importation of American cattle. The reason given for this action was the alleged existence of a plague among our animals. This report was at first scouted on this side of the water; but still an investigation of the subject was vigorously undertaken, and sure enough, a serious amount of disease has been discovered in this city, and on both sides of Long Island Sound. Stringent measures have been adopted to prevent the spread of the pest, which has been decided to be pleuro-pneumonia. On Long Island, where the trouble is most severe, all diseased cattle are to be slaughtered, all infected ones quarantined, and all stables inspected and disinfected. $10,000 has been appropriated by the State Legislature to prosecute the war upon the plague, and there is little cause for alarm that it will spread from this point.

In some respects, the most desirable of the many fires which have recently afflicted this island, was that which, on Thursday night last, destroyed the "New York Tattersalls," a large up-town boarding stable called after the famous London establishment of that name. Nearly ninety horses were domiciled in the building, less than twenty of which were rescued. Seventy of the noble animals, most of them blooded stock and very valuable, were burned or suffocated. The loss which is perhaps most to be regretted is that of a pair of Norwegian ponies, unused and recently imported by Mr. Theodore Havemeyer. They were the only specimens of this beautiful breed in the country, and were valued at $4,500.

A number of firemen were more or less injured in the work of extinguishing this conflagration, one or two of whom will probably die. The mortality among these brave fellows during the performance of their duty has been so heavy this winter, that one would think there would be difficulty in keeping the ranks full, especially in view of the late discussions in our noble city government, some members of which are so zealous in the cause of retrenchment that, while they do not think it would be expedient to "cripple the public service" by reducing their own salaries, are inclined to believe that the pay of the policemen and firemen ought to be cut down. Per contra, it ought in the sense consolation to the surviving fire lad that to see the results of a grand bonds performance which is being got up for the widows of two of their number who perished at the Broadway fires last month. It is said that the bereaved women will receive from the benefit at least $1,000.

The bright, the energetic, and—by courtesy—the fair Miss Anna Dickinson has reappeared, and is now delivering from time to time her new lecture on "The Stage." She admits herself an enthusiastic lover of the Stage, and at the outset that she is not before her audience to defend a bad cause, but to magnify a good one; whereupon she gives her hearers an hour's impassioned eulogy of the theatre, which she boldly claims is more effective as a moral power than the pulpit of the present day. As usual Miss Dickinson has stirred things up a good deal, and, as might be expected, has elicited various replies from the divines. Most of the latter combat her position, as in duty bound, but one candid parson told his congregation in the course of his sermon, a couple of Sundays since, that he thought the fearless Anna was about right—that the stage, at times, was ably administered, while the average pulpit was so much more feeble can listed as to render a comparison of the two disadvantageous to the latter. Miss Dickinson promises us the pleasure of seeing her in a new play of her own, before very long.

The most brilliant billiard tournament ever seen in this country, or in any country so far as I know, came to a close last week. It consisted of fifty six public games, played in the great hall of the Cooper Institute, by eight of the most expert players in America. The audiences were large and enthusiastic, and of exceptionally good quality, including a large proportion of ladies. The prizes distributed amounted to some $2,500 in value. RADIX.

The Senatorship.

Mr Christiancy's resignation of the office of Senator has been announced to the Legislature by Gov. Croswell, and that body will now proceed to elect his successor. Zachariah Chandler is undoubtedly the choice of great majority of the members, as he surely is of the masses of the Republican party in the State. He is fully worthy of that succession. He was a charter member of the Republican party and from its organization to this day has been staunch and true, unflinching and unyielding in his adherence to its noble principles; indomitable and positive in his zealous work in behalf of its righteous policies. His political record is well known, and bears no stain of dishonor. He is rallied to the extent of being thoroughgoing and positive. There is no half work in his methods nor his aims. He is also a man of unsullied integrity. His bitterest partisan opponents are free to concede that, and to express their admiration of the man for his firmness, even though they count it obstinacy, and for his strict honesty. When he was retired from the Senate four years ago by factious trickery and foul condition, the opposition press was forced to acknowledge that his record was clear of all taint and all suspicion of corrupt action. Yet against no man in the United States had there been directed a more persistent shower of detraction for 18 years than against him. But their sharpest arrows were little heeded by the logcentrade armor of his unburnished record. Friend and foe alike implicitly trusted him when he said yea or nay; and never was that trust betrayed. Of both Lincoln and Grant he was a warm-hearted personal friend and supporter. During the war of the rebellion it was his incredible and boldness that was chiefly instrumental in breaking the spell that so long held our gallant army spoils bound, chafing and at times almost discouraged on the Potomac and in the Virginia swamps, and set it free for the vigorous work and the onward march to the complete triumph of the national cause under General Grant. And in war and in peace alike Senator Chandler was ever mindful of the interests of his own state and of the gallant men whom she sent into the field. He was at all times the open foe of corruption and of corrupt confederations and conspiracies, of whatever character and his intuition and almost absolutely unerring quickness of perception was the occasion of the detection and thwarting of many a scheme of plunder. When the noted discussion upon the salary grab bill was going on, he was preparing in opposition to and denunciation of that measure—and all will remember how promptly both Chandler and Ferry washed their hands of all stain of that back salary money by returning the share that the iniquitous law gave to them into the United States Treasury. After he retired from the Senate, and was Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Chandler made a record for executive ability that any man might be proud of—such as forced from those who had previously been among the most vicious of his critics to speak well of his work and acknowledge the reality of the reforms which he instituted. The detractors and slanders of Mr. Chandler are not many nor conspicuous now. The few that pursue him do it in a sneaking, cowardly fashion, avoiding fair and open charges, because they have none that they can honestly make. Such opposition as that he must expect from a certain clique, envious crew, but it should not have a feather's weight against him at Lansing, and it will not with sensible, well informed men. Chandler is positive and aggressive in politics, in behalf of what he conceives to be right and against what he sees to be wrong. Only strong hearts fear him, and envious slanderers hate him. Such men as he will be needed more than ever in the next Congress, and he will be there. The Republicans of Michigan are not disposed to yield their choice for the sake of pooling either the open or secret enemies of Republicanism—they "have made other arrangements."—Grand Rapids Eagle

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are today dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence, of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Hon. H. Church, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Dutchbrett sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

On the 10th, at Troy, N. Y., G. F. Simmons, crazed by the elopement of his wife, poisoned his three children and then cut his own throat.

THE officials of the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad deny the report that trains were detained at Flora, Ill., on a recent Sunday, on account of the enforcement of the State Sunday laws. They say the dispatch to that effect originated with some misinformed or evilly-disposed person.

A TERRIBLE accident occurred at Kansas City, Mo., on the 11th. The walls of a cut being made there for the Chicago & Alton Railroad caved in, and four teams and about forty men were buried under 6,000 yards of falling earth. Six persons were killed outright, and several others were wounded.

SEC'Y SHERMAN, on the 12th, issued another call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds. The sum called for is $20,000,000, interest and principal payable on the 12th of May.

THE Missouri Court of Appeals has decided, in the case of an application for an injunction to restrain the St. Louis School Board from permitting the teaching of foreign languages and the ornamental branches in the public schools of that city, that the whole matter is in the hands of the Legislature, and that courts have no power in the premises.

A NATIONAL CONFERENCE of colored citizens will be held at Nashville, Tenn., on the 6th of May. The object of the gathering is said to be "to consider the situation of the colored people in the South in respect to the enjoyment of life, liberty and property; also, their educational, moral, social and political condition, and the question of emigration."

SEC'Y SHERMAN sent a letter to the National House of Representatives, on the 13th, in which he states that the estimate of expenditures for the next fiscal year amounts to $284,582,619. The estimated receipts are: From customs, $138,000,000; internal revenues, $100,000,000; miscellaneous sources, $15,500,000; total receipts, $257,500,000; leaving a deficiency of $27,082,619.

On the evening of the 13th, the New York Tattersalls was entirely destroyed by fire. Of the eighty horses stabled there, over sixty perished.

THE late reports of the reappearance of the yellow fever at various points in the South are emphatically denied by dispatches from Louisville and New Orleans.

WHILE doing a trapeze act in a Detroit theater, on the evening of the 13th, Mamie Leonine lost her grasp upon the bar, and fell headlong a distance of forty feet into the proscenium. The result was a broken collar bone, three fractured ribs and fatal internal injuries.

A MEETING was held at Syracuse, N. Y., on the 14th, participated in by Bishops Peck and Huntington, Chancellor Haven and other well-known Methodist clergymen and laymen, at which it was resolved to take measures for the suppression of the Oneida Community.

AN eleven-year-old boy, named Willie Zeigler, committed suicide, in Philadelphia, on the 15th, by shooting himself in the temple. He lived with his grandmother, who was absent from home at the time the deed was committed. The reason assigned for the suicide is a disturbance of mental balance caused by reading religious books.

AT Somerville, Me., a few days ago, Ephraim Tucker and wife left home to do some trading, leaving their three children, aged four years, two and a half years, and eight months, alone in the house. By some means the building caught fire, and, with its contents, was destroyed, the three children perishing in the flames. About a year before another child of the same parents was burned to death.

A NEGRO named Sam Hall is lying in the County Jail, at Columbus, Ohio, convicted, on circumstantial evidence solely, of the murder of a man named Holmes, in 1876, and sentenced to be hung therefor. Hall says that he was in the State Penitentiary for horse stealing, from 1873 to 1877, escaping in the latter year, and consequently could not have committed the murder. Investigation has shown his story true, and he will not of course be executed. Had he not been in prison at the time of murder, he would be hung for a crime he did not commit.

A FIRE broke out in the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, near Xenia, Ohio, on the morning of the 16th. There were 600 children in the Home at the time, and many narrow escapes are reported. The building was entirely destroyed, the teachers and officials losing all their personal effects. The loss to the State is about $75,000; no insurance.

XLVth Congress—Third Session.

THE credentials of Senator Carpenter, of Wisconsin, were placed on file in the Senate, on the 10th. A bill was introduced and referred authorizing the conversion of National gold bonds. The House bill authorizing an issue of certificates of deposit of the denomination of $10 dollars, in aid of the refunding of the public debt, was passed with an amendment increasing the amount required to $100. A petition of the Catholic Young Men's National Union was presented and referred, protesting against all discrimination in the appointment of Army Chaplains and asking that Catholic soldiers, seamen and Indians are deprived of the right of their religion and are subject to the charge of denominations in which they have no interest. Mr. Hoar introduced a bill to prevent the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. The bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture to consider when and how it ought to be done by the transfer. Adjourned to better advance, encourage and foster the cause of temperance. Bills were introduced in the House—to restore the franking privilege as to letters sent or received by Members of Congress; to abolish the mileage of Members of Congress and allow them instead a per diem of $8 during actual session; to increase the salaries of Judges; to repeal the laws authorizing the appointment of Supervisors of Elections and Deputy Marshals; to amend the laws and jurisdiction of United States Courts; to amend the laws relating to the qualifications of jurors, and also the law for the appointment and payment of Supervisors of Elections and their aids, were rejected—yeas, 126; nays, 127. Mr. Hurd then moved to reconsider the vote, which was also defeated—yeas, 39; nays, 194—in support of the rules and regulations of the National savings banks. The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill ($25,151,676) was considered in Committee of the Whole.

SEVERAL bills were reported in the Senate, on the 11th, among these being one to revise Appropriation bill, with amendments. The Conference report on the Naval Appropriation bill was agreed to. The Conference report on the urgency deficiency bill ($4,850,000) being $123,654 less than the appropriation for the present fiscal year, and $167,172 less than the estimates for the next year. A number of bills relating to the removal of political disabilities. In the House, the Conference report on the Naval Appropriation bill was agreed to. No help for it. Must be endured. All the cures of low degree have barked in unison against it, but the man goes loose to the senate, to whom Carl Chantz said: "What! be happy when leaving the department to have achieved as good a reputation for practical efficiency as you have won."

According to Congressman Foster, of Ohio, President Hayes wants to see ex-Secretary Chandler in the Senate again, and he also hopes Grant will succeed him in the Presidential chair. It is gratifying to occasionally find the President in accord with the party that elected him.—Hawkeye.

"Have you ever been in prison?" asked a lawyer of a witness, whom he was trying to badger and bully in a Harlan court. "Yes, sir." "When?" "In 1865." "Where?" "In Andersonville. There was a momentary pause for breath, and then a round of applause that took the court-room.—Exchange.

It turns out that the little boy who cut down his father's favorite cherry-tree and owned up, when said father organized himself into an investigating committee, rather than tell a lie, was not Samuel J. Tilden, George Washington or popularity supposed to have been the youngster, but it is due to Mr. Tilden that the story should be corrected.

Touching the cry of "fraud" in the election of 1876, Senator Chandler in his speech to the convention which nominated him at Lansing said: "I never did a thing, wrote a line, sent a telegram, either cipher or in the English language or in any other way, that I would not be glad to see in print to-morrow morning in all the Democratic papers in these United States."

General Grant-beats the world for complimentary sentences. The General recently reviewed the British troops at Gibraltar. He expressed himself as perfectly pleased with their discipline indeed could not see how it could be improved upon; then said: "There is something about them not found in any other soldiers—it may be their Anglo Saxon blood.—They have the Sizing of Conquest." No man has said so much in so few words as this same silent soldier statesman.

The selection of Hon. Zachariah Chandler as United States Senator from Michigan is very gratifying to the Record of that and other States. Mr. Chandler's integrity, usefulness and ability is appreciated by the people of his State and the country at large, and the opposition, such that it is, from rancor does not find room, took most kindly on him, and nearly every leading Michigan's Statesman is to the country. Rarely does the elevation of a citizen to this exalted station give the general satisfaction that Mr. Chandler's selection has.

A poor, trembling drunkard, wearing an old sea-elf sailor's suit, came past a pleasant home on Wabash Av., Chicago, where six little girls were playing. He stopped there, leaning over the fence, and said: "Darlings, will you speak to me." They all shrank back with fear from the tattered drunkard, except one little tot, not two years old. She stretched out her little hands and cooed her welcome. He took her in his arms, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, in consecrated humility to God. To-day he is a great and successful minister of the Gospel, as he had been before.—Maj. Ashington G. Welsh

The inquiry into the conduct of Major Reno at the battle of the little Big Horn river (the Custer massacre) in the session of 1876, which has been in progress for four weeks past in Chicago, before a court composed of army officers came to a close on the 11th inst. Roscoe Conkling, on behalf of the Government, submitted his argument against Major Reno, and, the court having heard it, resolved itself into secret session. It will remain with closed doors until it makes out its report, which, together with the decision reached by it in the premises, will be forwarded to Washington. That decision will not be made public until reversed or approved by the "powers that be" at the Capitol.

There was a curious debate in the House last Friday in which Gen. Butler hinted that at no distant day he might conclude that the time had come for pensioning Confederate soldiers just as freely as we pension those of the Union side, and for either paying alike claims of those who lost something in their efforts to destroy the Union, or not paying any Union claims at all. This is not the language in which the General defines his position, but it is the logic of the idea which he presented. Carried to its legitimate conclusion it would be the judgment that loyalty is no virtue and treason is no crime; that the latter is to be rewarded or the other given the cold shoulder. When a Government shall recognize such a principle, its end is near.

The Advertiser of Battle Creek are about to erect a paper mill. They will then be able to manufacture their own paper, stereotype plates, print it, bind it, and publish without assistance from the "world's people." Their growth has been marvelous. From a few wooden buildings, six or eight years ago, they now occupy the finest part of the city, and their numbers have increased from 3 to 7,000 souls. Their property, consisting of a rickety printing office and a small water-pen, has increased to a magnificent mountain, costing $125,000; a college, $10,000; a tabernacle, $50,000; and a large printing office and bindery, $25,000—their society property being worth about $250,000, all constructed within a few years.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made by Emma H. Newman, of Wilson, Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Julius Pratt, of the same county aforesaid, dated the first day of July, A. D. 1875, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 10th day of November, A. D. 1875, in Liber "Three" of Mortgages, on page 222, which mortgage was duly assigned by the said Julius Pratt to William B. Sargent, on the 14 day of November, A. D. 1876, and the assignment thereof recorded in the office of the said Register of Deeds of Charlevoix county on the 16th day of November, A. D. 1876, in Liber "Three" of Mortgages, on page 58, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of One hundred and Thirty-nine Dollars and fifty-seven cents, and an attorney's fee of thirty dollars, provided for in said mortgage, but no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given, that on Friday, the 14th day of March, A. D. 1879, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Court House, in the village of Charlevoix, that being the place where the circuit court for said county is holden, the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest, costs, charges and all legal fees, and the attorney's fee aforesaid, and all legal costs, together with any taxes and assessments or liens, if any, that may be paid by the undersigned on said premises before the sale. The premises described in said mortgage, as all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section eighteen (18) in Township thirty-four (34) North of Range five (5) West, containing forty acres more or less.

Dated this 25th day of December, 1878.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage made and executed by Dewitt Madgett and Margaret Madgett, his wife, of Marion, Charlevoix county, Michigan, to W. H. Custar, of Charlevoix, State and county aforesaid, dated August 12, A. D. 1876, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 12th day of August, A. D. 1876, in Liber "Three" of Mortgages, on page 311, which mortgage was duly assigned by the said W. H. Custar to Simon L. French, of Ann Arbor, Mich., on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1876, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, aforesaid, on the 30 day of September, A. D. 1876, in Liber "Three" of Mortgages, on page 455, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, for principal and interest, the sum of two hundred and fifty-six dollars and sixty seven cents, and an Attorney's fee of thirty dollars, provided for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given, that on Friday, the 14th day of March, A. D. 1879, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Court House, in the village of Charlevoix, that being the place where the circuit court for said county is holden, the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest, costs, charges and all legal fees, and the attorney's fee aforesaid, and all legal costs, together with any taxes and assessments or liens, if any, that may be paid by the undersigned on said premises before the sale. The premises described in said mortgage, as all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section eighteen (18) in Township thirty-four (34) North of Range five (5) West, containing forty acres more or less.

The Vote on the Bridge Tax.

In this issue of the Sentinel appears a notice that the voters in Charlevoix County will be called upon at the spring election to vote upon the "Bridge Tax." Simultaneous with its appearance in our columns copies of it are posted in three of the most conspicuous places in the thirteen Townships of the county. Ostensibly, the object sought is revealed in the text of the notice, but in point of fact, it is a revelation of supine stupidity on. It promulgates a spirit of repudiation, bereft of power but not of will.

When the tax was voted by the Board of Supervisors, of the minority opposed the proposition on "general principles," and raised no point of allegality. The tax was voted, the bridge built, the bonds issued and negotiated, and must be paid.

Now will one of the Supervisors who voted to submit this to the people, tell the public what they are submitting, and what will be accomplished by either an all-unitive or negative result of the vote? Will they tell us what right they have to add even the small amount of $75 to the taxes simply to humor a caprice?

We pronounce it a piece of schoolboy folly, and we challenge any one of the anti-bridge Supervisors to say nay and defend his position.

Groceries and provisions, a good supply at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

His Safe.—The Muskegon News and Reporter says: "Chas. Lowe, a Grand Rapids Howe Sewing Machine Agent, well known in this city died a few weeks ago, and his last words were 'open my lung protector.' His wife did so, and found $400 in cash."

Our Roads.—Let us look well to our highways when the time comes for action this spring. Money spent in improving the highways leading to our village will return to us fourfold. Make the highway tax large enough to do good liberal work on the roads.

Donkey Scrapes.—One of the series of law suits in which our esteemed fellow townsman, Michael Dooney is a party—this time McCabe vs. Dooney—came off before Justice Clark one day last week. Damages against Dooney of $108.96, including cost. The seat of the series is not announced.

The Emmet County Democrat says that the school house of District No. 6 of Evangeline Township, Charlevoix county, caught fire a few days ago and was considerably damaged before the flames were extinguished. It was a new house, and the present is the first term of school that has been taught in it.

The Ludington Democrat contains an account of the killing of a wild-cat by Mr. Marcus Griswold at Weldon Creek. Hearing a racket in his hen-coop, Mr. Griswold took his lantern and a hoe and went out to ascertain the cause. The sudden flash of the lantern in its eyes so bewildered the cat that Mr. G. succeeded in killing it without receiving a scratch. The animal measured four feet in length.

The State Republican press has very generally expressed itself regarding the outcome in the Rose-Douglass controversy in the University, and it is nearly unanimous in its expression of gratification. There is no doubt that it echoes the sentiment of the people. Charlevoix has two of the University Alumni—one a Republican, the other a Democrat,—and both are unqualifiedly Rose men. They thoroughly understand the true inwardness of the matter. Real dat a noble work in fighting that ring singlehanded, and he well deserves applause.

Gone to Indiana.—The news comes from Lansing, through the Republican and other sources, that R. H. Morrison formerly Treasurer of the Grand Bodies of I. O. O. F., of the State, has left Sturgis and is now living in Indiana, out of reach of the officers of Michigan. It is reported that he was arrested at the instance of his bondsmen who managed to give the officers who had him in custody, the slip. The official report of the reference shows a deficit of nearly $11,000 in his accounts as Grand Treasurer.

OLD CHURCH BELLS.

Ring out merrily,
Lightly, cheerily,
Ritter old bells from the steeple tower,
Hopefully, fearfully,
Joyfully, tearfully,
Mer old bells from her maiden bower.

Cloud there is none in the bright summer sky;
Sunshine flings luminous down from on high;
Children ring loud as the train moves along,
Happy the bride that its sun shineth on.

Knell out drearily,
Measure out wearily,
And the bells from the steeple gray,
Tremble shaking slowly,
Solemnly, slowly,
Funeral De corpse from the portal to-day.

Drops from the laden clouds heavily fall
Dreamily over the plowse and pall;
Murmur of folk, as the train moves along,
Happy the dead that the rain raineth on.

Toll at the hour of prime,
Matin and vesper chime,
Loved old bells from the steeple high—
Hushing, like holy wave,
Over the lowly grave,
Floating its progress through the sky.

Redeem the lesson your lightest notes teach;
Pure is the preaching your iron tongues preach;
Sermon of life from the lead to the bloom,
Ringing the knell to their rest in the tomb.

Peal out evermore—
Wake ye to pray and pore,
Brave old bells on each Sabbath day,
Insistence on godliness,
Through clouds and through sadness,
Bridal and burial have both passed away.

Tell us life's pleasures with death are still rife;
Tell us that death's every loadstone is life;
Life is our labor, and death is our rest,
If happy the living, the dead are the blest.

—Dublin University Magazine.

AN ADVENTURE ON AN ICEBERG

Peter Alswig was the Government sooper in the little Danish Colony of Upernavik on the West Coast of North Greenland. He had gone thither when a young man, intending to remain only a short time, but he married there during the very first year, and, with a family growing up about him, it was not strange that he became a permanent colonist.

His first-born was a son, and he named him Carl Emile. Young Carl grew up to be a tall, bright-eyed, active fellow, and, bleak and desolate as was his native Upernavik, he loved it dearly. Had he wished, he could have gone home to his father's old home in Denmark, where for a youth of his age there were many advantages that a wild Greenland colony does not possess; but Carl cared for none of them; as preferred the perfect freedom of his life, the cheery snow where he worked by his father's side and the excitement of the seal-hunt. Beside, there was Nicholina. Nicholina was the daughter of the Governor's assistant, and it was said that in all that country round about, there was no one like her; no girl so pretty, no girl so kind, so generous or so good. Carl would have made sorry work of it had he tried to hide his feelings toward Nicholina, as it was, they seemed to be known to everybody but Nicholina herself. When he would find talk serious, her merry laughter forbade it; she would never listen to him. She seemed never to think of marriage. Some people said she was too proud, and others she thought there was nobody good enough for her. She was, however, never backward in promoting plans for general pleasure. In all dances and festivals she took a leading part, and possessing a fine taste and great skill in needle-work, she was very generous on such occasions, for her cunningly embroidered dress of cloth and seal-skin, trimmed with tender eiderdown, and her jacket sparkling with beads.

So it came about that although Carl was always happy he was never quite contented. But he was a brave, manly fellow, who was not ashamed of his own thoughts, and he worked blithely at the barrels and tubs, with no fear for the future.

Perhaps all this made Carl care less for the public festivals and dances than the other young men. At any rate although the Spring Festival was at hand, he went off to hunt seals with his father.

Seal-hunting in the spring is a great sweat in Greenland life. There is one kind of seal that cuts holes in the ice with its sharp claws, and when the sun shines the animals come out of the water and sleep. While they are sleeping they are approached by the hunters, who conceal themselves behind white screens attached to little sleds which push noiselessly over the ice.

Peter and Carl decided that they would go to Peverick, a little rocky mountainous island about twenty-five miles to the northward of Upernavik. The ice, as seen from the hill behind the village, was firm all the way to the island; but, outside, it had been already a good deal broken up and drifted off by recent gales.

Not much time was needed for preparation. They would take the whole family, consisting of two boys and two girls and Carl Emile and their mother, and they would stay two weeks. Peter took three of the children and the family tent on his sledge, while Carl took his mother and one brother and all the camp fixtures. Each sledge was drawn by nine strong dogs, and the journey was quickly made. The tent was pitched on a level spot overlooking the sea, and, after a hearty supper and a good night's rest, the two hunters harnessed their dogs to their sleds, and drove at a lively pace far out upon the frozen sea. After some time, they discovered a number of seals lying beside their holes, and the dogs were quickly made fast to a stake driven in the snow-drift, and each hunter was soon behind his white screen and sled, stealing cautiously upon the game. But though they moved very slowly for half an hour, the seals somehow became frightened and plunged into the water before Peter and Carl got within shooting-distance from them.

This was an unlucky failure, especially as no more seals were to be seen in any direction. A small iceberg in the distance, however, seemed to offer a better spot from which to survey the ice-field, and, having driven to it, the two hunters proceeded to climb it. They looked out over the great waste, but a few seals that they perceived far off did not tempt them, and as a strong wind had suddenly sprung up and a storm was threatening, they felt that there would be no luck on that day and they might as well go back to the camp at Peverick.

When they had descended the seaward side of the iceberg, they paused a little while, attracted by an immense flight of sea-gulls that came sailing about the icebergs, uttering wild, discordant screams. While watching the birds, they were startled by a noise sudden and appalling as of a tremendous discharge of artillery. A huge iceberg, not half a mile distant, had split in two, and, as it fell apart, it set in motion great waves which threatened to shatter the ice in all directions. Already, as they gazed bewildered, a long crack spread with a loud splitting noise between them and the shore!

Not a moment was to be lost! The dogs' leads were turned toward Peverick, and long lashes whistled in the air, and away they dashed as hard as they could go over the dark, treacherous ice. Too late! Too late! As they approached, they could see the black fissure grow wider and wider, and, when they reached the shore, the eddying water between forbade all hope of crossing.

They drove back to the iceberg and climbed it, hoping to find that to be the mainland. They were disappointed. On every side they saw the water. They were afloat upon a great raft of ice that was bearing them steadily away toward the southwest! In this, however, there was nothing very alarming, since the chances were that the ice-field on which they stood would swing around and close in with the land again. But presently the iceberg grounded, and the shock caused the field to crack again. A great seam opened swiftly at their very feet, and before they could realize their danger a wide channel yawned between them and their dogs with the laden sleds. The ice-field adhering to the berg swung around as upon a pivot, and, as it did so, the berg became detached from the bottom, and the whole mass floated off into deep water. The field-ice broke away bit by bit, and finally the berg itself alone remained, with Peter and Carl upon it, shrinking out toward the open ocean, utterly powerless to help themselves!

Their first thoughts were not for themselves, but for the helpless ones at Peverick.

"Carl, my boy," said Peter, "that last crack did the business for us; and unless God wills it otherwise, we are lost. But it is hard to think that those on shore must starve."

Peter's voice was husky, and tears trickled down his face.

Peter had scarcely spoken when a number of seals appeared upon the edge of the land ice. The hunters instinctively raised their rifles and fired, each killing his animal, although the distance was very great. A moment afterward they saw (for they were now right opposite the camp at Peverick) the whole family climbing up the hillside over the snow as if to look for them.

"They see us, and they must see the seals we shot!" exclaimed Carl. "They won't starve now, though we may drift away, and, if they never see us again, surely they will find them before the two seals are eaten."

Up to this time the wind had been blowing quite fresh, but now it suddenly burst into a gale, with occasional spurts of snow. The clouds became dark and heavy, and after a while the snow-fall was constant. The hunters were in a most wretched condition. Everything around them was obscured, and they were drifting they knew not whither, nor in what direction. Waves broke against the iceberg, and the spray wet them to the skin; and, as it grew colder, they became covered with icicles. They spoke but little. One could hardly comfort the other in such an emergency, but both prayed fervently. Peter thought of his wife and children, Carl of his mother and Nicholina, neither of whom he ever expected to see again. And thus they drifted on through the angry sea and the gloomy, cold and dreadful night, until at length they felt a heavy shock. The iceberg had grounded, and, to their great joy, it held fast. They knew now that they were in comparatively shallow water, and consequently could not be far out at sea; so hope once more inspired them. If their bergs could hold until the storm should clear away, some means of escape might be discovered.

If the storm would but cease! The outlook, now, in spite of hopefulness, is dreary enough.

Meanwhile, how very different is it with the friends in Upernavik! While the angry sounds of the warring elements deafen the ears of the hunters, at Upernavik the lights are glimmering brightly, and the cheery fires on the village hearths defy the storm that howls without. It is the night of the Hunting Festival. Although it is night, it is not dark, but the heavy clouds and the thickly falling snow render everything obscure. In the cooper shop, candles are burning above the merry crowd, and the storm vainly tries to drown the sounds of their music and laughter. Nicholina is there in all her glory, and her pretty dress of warm cloth trimmed with seal fur and delicate cider-down, her embroidered jacket, her raven tresses and bright ribbons, make her as pretty a picture as all Greenland ever looked upon. All are as happy as happy can be, and the Governor and his officials are present, aiding in the general enjoyment.

Some one enters, and says to the Governor that down upon the shore he has heard strange noises coming in from the sea. Another presently runs in and says that he, too, has heard the sounds, and that they resemble the cries of dogs in distress. But all laugh at the idea and say: "It is the storm you hear! Dogs are not fish that they should take to the water." But a third running in to confirm the story, they are alarmed, and hastily make for the shore. As they run down to the rocks they hear distinctly a distant wail borne on the fierce blast. Dogs they are, undoubtedly; but whose dogs can they be?

They go down near the beach and peer into the gloom. They have not long to wait before the air lightens up a little, and vaguely they see a broad ice-field, and upon it are the dogs. Nicholina is the first to discover them, and, quickly pushing her way through the crowd, she stands almost at the water's edge. The spray touches her, but she does not seem to heed it, and, for once, it least, does not appear to think of her fine clothes. Being taller than the rest, she can see more plainly than the rest.

"Come back, Nicholina, or you'll be drowned!" cried her father. "Come back, Nicholina!" cried everybody; but she stood there motionless, looking from beneath her hand. There is an intense earnestness about her manner that overcomes all remonstrance, and her father, fogetting his command that she shall come back, now eagerly asks:

"What is it, Nicholina?" All the men crowd forward, and their faces wear a look of pain and anxiety as the possibility of some great calamity suggests itself. In a few minutes, they can all see the dogs and recognize them. They are, beyond question, Peter and Carl's dogs; but where are their masters? Where are Peter's wife and his boys and girls? What has happened to them all?

The dogs, seeing the people on the shore, and knowing they are safe, whine joyfully, and as the ice-field comes crashing in and piling great fragments up against the rocks, they scamper gladly upon the land. There are eighteen of them; not one is missing; but of their masters the great ice-field gives no trace.

"They are lost!" cries everybody. But Nicholina, still standing by the surf, with trembling voice, says: "Oh, no! It cannot be so! It grows lighter we shall surely see them!"

Two dark objects come into view upon the rolling field, and every eye is strained toward them. But as they approach each heart sinks again. They are only the sleds.

The Governor shakes his head sadly.

"Let a watch be kept and be relieved every hour, and let me know if anything is seen of them," he says, going home; the morning may need all your energies."

The Governor's order is obeyed, and Nicholina, distracted with her fears, is taken home by force made to go with her father.

The first to the beach in the morning is Nicholina. The brave girl is pale, and her bright eyes are dimmed with tears.

The sun mounts higher from the horizon, and little by little the clouds lift and the view becomes less obscured. The snow ceases to fall. By and by the keen eye of Nicholina detects the shimmer of a great iceberg as she scans the surface of the dark waters. She sees the ice clearly and the waves breaking against its sides. It grows more and more distinct, and presently its lofty crest is visible. Other bergs come into view one by one, and a ray of sunlight falls upon Nicholina. She raises her heart to God in a silent prayer. To her the sunbeam is a good omen, and she watches it as it passes away over the waters. Her eyes follow its path on intense longing. It shines on the great iceberg; it blazes brightly upon the crystal sides of the group just beyond, and finally illuminates a low, white mass away out among the reefs and breakers. Nicholina sees for an instant a dark object near the summit. Her eyes dilate, her whole figure trembles with excitement, and she cries forth:

"It is he! It is Carl Emile! The boat!—the boat!"

The astonished people flock around her and ask: "Where?" where?" for they cannot see. She only replies, with half-frenzied gestures: "It is Carl Emile! Come away! The boat! The boat!"

She leads the way to the little harbor, and seizing the line of the best sea-boat there, begins to haul it in, while the people stand around and stare at her in astonishment.

"I will rescue him!" she cries.

"Who?" they ask.

"Carl Emile! He is out there on the iceberg. I see him, and I will go to him and save him!"

By this time, Nicholina has sprung into the boat. She stands at the bow, and, with flashing eyes, she cries:

"Who will come with me? Who will rescue Carl Emile?"

In vain they expostulate and say that no boat can live in that sea. Nicholina is not to be daunted, and as she repeats her cry, a dozen young fellows leap forward. In a moment, six of them are in the boat, and in their places.

"We will go, Nicholina," they say; "but you must stay here!"

Nicholina's answer is to seize an oar, spring to the stern, shove the boat off, and begin to pull. The young men are quick to follow her irresistible example, and the boat shoots out of the sheltered harbor into the angry waves, on whose crests are tossing sharp fragments of ice, which, by striking one against the other, add to the tumult of the winds and waves.

The people on the shore watch the boat as at one moment it mounts a sea and again sinks away into the trough, and, for an instant, is lost to view. But steadily the distance between it and the shore widens, though it does not go a length without danger of being crushed by the tumbling ice.

The men try to persuade Nicholina to abandon her oar, but she will not.

"I brought you here, and while I share the danger I will share the labor," is her reply.

An anxious hour passes, and the boat disappears behind an island. A half hour more and it is seen dancing between that island and another further up to windward. Behind this it vanishes again, and then the people say: "The boat is surely lost with all on board. Nicholina must have been mad."

But the boat is not lost, only it cannot be seen from shore. Beyond the second island it is headed toward the little iceberg where Nicholina first saw the dark object which she took for Carl Emile. But she does not see any dark object now. Perhaps it is the motion of the boat which is unfavorable to observation.

The water is very angry, and, what with the fury of the wind and waves, the boat often makes no headway for minutes at a time. "Give way, men! pull for life!" cries Nicholina. "Give way! give way!" they shout in chorus after her, and the boat creeps on. They come among loose ice which strikes their oars, and they fall back; cry out: "Give way!" the brave girl shouts again, "Give way!" is the responsive echo, and again the boat moves on.

They are among the boiling surf of the reef and are almost overwhelmed, but "give way" again, and they are safe from that danger, and nearing the stiller water in the lee of the iceberg for which they steer. They reach that water, and make more rapid headway; they reach the berg, and are Gallied against it, but the boat is not broken. Nicholina has dropped her oar, she has stood up in the bow, her long black hair flying in the winds, she is one foot upon the gunwale, and before the shock of contact with the berg has ceased she has leaped upon the ice!

She looks about her, but does not discover the object of her search. Her companions, who have come upon a little to the left, and there lie two motionless figures locked in each other's arms. The younger is without a coat, and with head bared, and every sense about the other. They are partly sheltered from the wind, but only poorly from the surf. The girl senses the younger man's hand, crying with a voice of agony: "Carl! Carl Emile!"

"Alas!" they cry, "Nicholina was wrong. They have not found Carl Emile or Peter!"

Nicholina relieves their minds by crying out: "We have found them. They are here. They are alive." And then the people cheer. The men are carried to their homes: the doctor comes and finds they are not frozen, only numbed. The danger of reaction is great, but with careful nursing they both revive, and are found not to have suffered permanent harm.

Within a week, Carl Emile is about as well and strong as ever; but it is full a month before Peter is himself again, and it is doubtful if he will ever be quite the same strong man he was. Carl's first thoughts were of his mother and brothers and sisters at Peverick. But the ice is completely broken up, and a boat could not for many days be either pulled through it or dragged over it. Those were days of agony to Carl. But at length Peverick was reached, and all was well. Carl's mother had given him and her husband up for lost from the moment she saw the boat being carried off to sea on the iceberg. It was fortunate that those two seals, which Carl's brother brought to camp, were shot by the two hunters in the tent, begun to haul it in, while the people stand around and stare at her in astonishment.

All are reunited and happy at Upernavik, and the pretty Nicholina is the heroine of the village. The people cannot say too much in praise of her courage and devotion. At last, Carl is will again and able to go out, looking not so much the worse for his adventure.

It is needless to say to whose house lie went as soon as he did get out, or to narrate what he said to her or what she said to him. It is sufficient that you should know that not many days elapsed before there was a grand wedding in Upernavik, and that a handsomer, happier couple never lived in Greenland, nor indeed anywhere, than Carl and his brave, black-eyed Nicholina.—Dr. Isaac I. Hayes, in St. Nicholas.

Making Our Friends at Home.

Is it possible for our friend to "just make himself at home" in our house, as we so often invite and enjoin him to do? Something depends, no doubt, on the friend, but more, we think, on the home. If the guest be incapable of forgetting his own home, and given to contrasting unfavorably everything that is unlike it in others; or, if he be one of the unsidentive sort—a human "old cat," who is never at ease when out of his accustomed haunts, or if he (more frequently, perhaps, that he else,) only goes about among friends to be "entertained," in such case you can't well make them at home, nor avoid wishing them there!

On the other hand, if you desert the pleasant family quarters and plant your friend amid the unused liveries of the still "best room;" if you bar the children on dress parade, and break up all their wonted good times; if you palpably make a decided difference in the family fare, as if your friend came to learn the qualifications of your cook or to judge of your ability to "keep house;" in a word, your everyday domestic life is so broken up that, having a guest implies a complete change in the internal arrangements and economies of the household, he cannot, if a sensible and sensitive person, feel himself "at home," for he will perceive that you are not.

Think what being "at home" means to yourself, and try and let your guest experience something of that feeling. You require a certain liberty, and an atmosphere of naturalness for your contentment; a knowledge that you are not making undue work or worry, and a "sort of slippers-and-dressing-gown freedom of deportment, for your comfort. You don't want your downsitting and up-rising too much planned out for you. You expect to be courteous, and agreeable, and punctual, and to practice the rest of the household virtues as much as in you lies, but you don't want to talk at a mark all the time nor to have everything give way for your entertainment. There isn't a better rule of politeness and hospitality in the world than the one called "golden." The trouble is that we keep it too much for ethical or "great moral" occasions, instead of using it to use in the every-day affairs of life. We can best enable our friends to make themselves at home by keeping at home ourselves.—Golden Rule for February.

Axes in History.

The ax has quite a history, for in Homer's time iron was used for woodcutters' axes, etc. It was an ancient weapon of war and appears to have been used from the most remote periods by warring nations, and was so about the other. They are partly sheltered from the wind, but only poorly from the surf. The girl senses the younger man's hand, crying with a voice of agony: "Carl! Carl Emile!"

"Alas!" they cry, "Nicholina was wrong. They have not found Carl Emile or Peter!"

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—Crullers.—Four tablespoons of milk, four of melted butter or lard, six of rolled sugar, heaping, four eggs, one teaspoon salt, one small teaspoon soda, a grated nutmeg; mix still enough to roll out easily, and fry in lard.

—Marking for Braiding.—Lay a piece of impression paper on your cloth; then lay on your pattern, and run around it with lead pencil, and yourwill have your pattern marked on your cloth as nicely as if you had paid some one a large sum to stamp it.

—Bread Cake.—Dissolve a teaspoon of soda in a wine glass of milk; strain it on three teacups of raised dough; a teacup of lukewarm melted butter, two teacups sugar, three eggs, two teaspoons cinnamon; fruit if you like. Work the whole fifteen minutes; let it stand fifteen minutes before baking.

—Floating Island.—Set a quart of sweet milk to boil, then stir into it the beaten yolks of six eggs, flavor with lemon, and sweeten to taste. Whip the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth, add a little sugar, drop in spoonfuls on the hot custard until it rises, pour the custard in a deep dish, when it is thick enough, and lasuy the frothed egg upon it.

—Delicate Cake.—One cup of butter, three cups of sugar, the whites of twelve eggs beaten to a stiff froth, one cup sweet milk, two teaspoons cream tartar, one of soda, four cups even full sifted flower, two teaspoons essence of lemon; work the butter and sugar to a cream, then add the milk and flour, in which the cream-tartar has been mixed; and lastly, the whites of the eggs and soda.

—Suet Pudding.—One cup molasses, one cup sweet milk, one cup suet chopped very fine, one cup raisins, one teaspoon soda, teaspoon cloves, cinnamon, nutmeg; steam three hours; flour to make a batter thick enough to drop from the spoon. Eat with liquid sauce. The pudding may be baked if more convenient, and a half teacup of lard or butter may be used instead of the suet.

—Chocolate Cake.—Two eggs, twothirds cup of butter, two cups sugar, one cup of sweet milk, three cups flour, two teaspoons and a half of baking powder; bake in layers. Take a cup and a half of white coffee sugar, put enough water on to just cover it, and boil until it is as thick as syrup, beat it until it begins to look white like cream, then flavor with vanilla, and spread on the layers very quickly; over this layer of cream spread on a coating of chocolate which has been melted by holding a hot stone-griddle over it, or in the oven; stir the chocolate smooth before putting on.

Engage Help.—Look about early in the season, and get your pick and have hands in the market. Make a written bargain in detail, no matter if you are well acquainted. This will prevent misunderstanding. Be sure and secure the main a certain number of months; to perform certain chores Sunday or holidays; to start stout such an hour in the morning, and close at such an hour in the evening. If, in case of an emergency, he works longer, he may have certain privileges to compensate for it. In case he quits before his time is out, he only receives a certain stipulated sum.—Agricultural Exchange.

—As usual at this season we are informed that the fruit crop throughout the country is ruined by the cold weather. All this croaking may prove to be justifiable, but we have become so accustomed to these annual announcements of destruction by either frosts, heat or winds, that we put little confidence in the prophets who make them. The fruit buds may be injured in some localities, but it is seldom that there is any great scarcity of fruits in our markets. Last season peaches were a short crop, but all the small fruits, as well as pears and apples, were more than abundant; in fact, the market was glutted.—N. Y. Sun.

—Swiss Pudding.—Sift together half a pound of flour, one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder, and one of salt; rub together four ounces of granulated sugar and two ounces of butter, and when they are well mixed, so as to be granular, but not creamy, add the flour and a little nutmeg; then cups even full sifted flower, two teaspoons essence of lemon; work the butter and sugar to a cream, then add the milk and flour, in which the cream-tartar has been mixed; and lastly, the whites of the eggs and soda.

—Suet Pudding.—One cup molasses, one cup sweet milk, one cup suet chopped very fine, one cup raisins, one teaspoon soda, teaspoon cloves, cinnamon, nutmeg; steam three hours; flour to make a batter thick enough to drop from the spoon. Organic Matter in the Soil.

A purely mineral soil may be fertile, but while this is true the effects of vegetable matter upon the mineral particles of a soil are exceedingly important. These effects are also very varied, acting as they do mechanically and chemically, and seriously affect to the difficulties of arriving at a true solution of the problems of plant growth. Vegetable matter is not plant food until it becomes decomposed, and mineralized; this should be clearly understood at the outset. But while it is undecomposed it exerts its mechanical effects, and thus, to a large extent, aids the soil in supporting its burden of vegetation. It renders the soil more absorbent and retentive of water, and it also causes it to absorb and retain the heat of the sun's rays to a large extent. Moisture and heat are not only useful to plants and aid and hasten their growth, but they are very active agents in forwarding chemical changes in matter. Thus its mechanical effects are exerted beneficially both directly and indirectly upon the soil. An instance of the absorptive and retentive qualities of vegetable matter has been given by Schubler, in his record of a long series of experiments, as follows: Common arable soil absorbed 52 per cent. of its weight of water before it became saturated, and in four hours afterward 32 per cent. of this water was lost by evaporation. A garden soil well supplied with vegetable matter absorbed 89 per cent. of its weight of water, and lost only 24 per cent. of it in four hours. But a peat soil absorbed 181 per cent. of water and lost but 25 per cent. of that by evaporation in four hours. The capacity of a dark soil for absorbing and retaining heat is well known, and need only be referred to. But it is in its process of decomposition that vegetable matter is most valuable in its effects. During this process carbonic acid and ammonia are both formed. These act as solvents upon various mineral substances, setting free potash, lime and phosphoric acid from their combinations, and rendering them fit for plant food. It has been generally supposed that the useful effects of vegetable matter in the soil depend upon the amount of nitrogen contained in it and the consequent production of nitrates; but it is the immediate effects of organic matter which are thus produced by the active and stimulating character of these nitrates, and it is the permanent effects upon the soil that are produced by the carbonaceous and inorganic elements of vegetable matter. Nitric acid, which is one result of the vitrification in the soil of decaying vegetable matter, as well as its chemical compounds, are very soluble, and enter at once into the circulation of plants, if any are growing upon the soil; otherwise these soluble substances are rapidly carried off from the soil by the rainfall, or from its surface wastings. Carbonic acid is more slowly formed, and as this is produced the mineral residue is left. The mineral remains of plants are more readily appropriated by vegetation than the same elements of the living tissues—being in a more soluble condition, and are thus more valuable, but at the same time are more readily exhausted.

The natural organic matter in the soil is derived from the remains of plants which have been produced, have lived their allotted time, and have decayed. It exists in soils that are rich in vegetable matter, such as the heavy prairie sods of the West or newly-cleared woodlands, the peat-bogs or muck swamps so frequent everywhere. In cultivated lands it is derived from the roots and stubble left in the soil after harvest, from grass crops and sod plowed under for this special purpose. The amount of organic matter thus derived is very considerable. The following table gives the amounts left by the various crops named, viz.:

	Pounds of roots and stubble per acre, dry.	Containing nit. Pounds per acre, pounds.
Lucern	5,678	136
Red clover	3,921	101
Peas	3,262	78
Oats	2,361	36
Wheat	1,647	26
Peas	3,222	85
Buckwheat	1,799	17
Barley	1,799	32

Of this organic matter thus left in the soil, there are the following mineral constituents (in pounds per acre), viz.:

Crop.	Lime.	Magnesia.	Pot-ash.	Soda.	Sul. Acid.	Phos. Acid.
Lucern	177.7	34.1	36.7	26.4	18.7	30.6
Red clover	203.6	46.4	39.2	14.2	19.1	24.6
Rye	23.2	14.3	31.2	43.7	11.2	24.4
Peas	24.3	11.8	31.2	4.3	7.3	11.6
Wheat	26.7	10.1	29.4	11.0	7.4	11.8
Oats	20.0	7.2	9.5	4.2	5.6	11.0
Buckwheat	90.0	7.2	8.6	4.2	6.6	11.0
Barley	20.0	7.2	9.5	4.2	5.6	11.0

These figures are very worthy of study. It is shown by them that the organic matter left in the soil by the various crops is equal in dry matter to that contained in from sixteen tons of stable manure in the case of red clover down to about four tons in the case of barley; also, that the phosphoric acid left in clover roots and stubble of an ordinary crop is equal to that contained in 600 or 700 pounds of Peruvian guano of the best quality. It is also worthy of remark that the organic matter left in the soil in several of these crops is more than sufficient to supply nitrogen and mineral matter for an abundant following crop, and that the organic matter of the soil was very much to do with the successful practice of rotation in crops.—N. Y. Times.

The electric light is to have a trial in Paris, under the supervision of the municipal authorities. For a year, the Avenue l'Opera and the Place de la Bastille, and one of the market-buildings, are to be lit by the electric light, at a charge not exceeding six cents per hour for each burner, while the gas company is to light the Rue du Quarire Septembre, the Place du Chateau d'Eeu, and another market-building, in an improved fashion, at an extra charge of not more than one cent per cubic meter.

It must be good, for everybody recommends it, and the doctors prescribe it. We mean Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Price 25 cents.

The Afghans.

The Afghans are tall, of large and well-built frames, muscular and hardy. Their strong, heavy features and dark skins give them a fierce expression of countenance; their black eyes—"their lids tinged with antimony to add force, beauty and dazzling brilliancy to them"—are full of fire, so that their swift, bold and flaunting glance is very impressive. They wear their hair shaved from the forehead to the top of the head, the rest falling in black, thick masses to the shoulders. The dress of the people is of cotton, or of cloth called barek, made of camel's hair, and is worn in two long and very full robes, the material used by the wealthy classes being of silk or cashmere; blue or white turbans and slippers complete the costume.

The garments of the young Chiefs are often quite gay with gold-lace or gold-thread embroidery. This ornamentation is done by the women in the harems, who are very skillful with the needle.

Comte de Gobineau, in his "Romances of the East," thus describes a young Afghan Chief, whose name was Meehen, meaning beautiful: "His complexion was richly tawny, like the skin of fruit ripened by the sun. His black locks fell in large curls, while ringlets round the compact folds of his blue turban striped with red; a sweeping and rather long beard, carefully dressed the delicate outline of his upper lip, which was cleanly cut, mobile, proud and breathing of life and passion. His eyes, large and deep, flashed rapidly. He was tall, strong, slender, broad-shouldered and strait-flanked. No one could ever dream of asking such a race; it was evident that the purest Afghan blood flowed in his veins."

The boundary of young Afghans is frequently spoken of by Eastern writers; but it would seem from the nature of things as though this glowing description must be overdrawn, just as the handsome, pensive young Ouzes of our well-beloved West Indian romancer, James Fenimore Cooper, can hardly be recognized in the modern Modoc. Still, abundant testimony claims a dark and hardy beauty for the Afghan in his prime.—L. B. Gustafson, in Harper's Magazine for March.

Bridal Dresses.

The material for bridal robes this season are remarkably elegant. Extensions in the fashion of brocade-satin brocades for brides over twenty years of age, and silk brocades for young brides—though the latter, by conventional consent, the one material always in vogue for the bridal robe, is clamored for by some, while plain gros-grain silk has its votaries, and India mull, Swiss mull and French organdy muslin dresses are sent out for youthful brides, who do not feel willing to afford the expense of a dress more costly.

Bridal veils and gauzes which are shown for bridal robes are in several distinct tints of white, and several distinct shades of these tints. In cream tints the most delicate there is the dark rich, yellowish shade of the Alderney cream, twenty-four years old; and, according to the age of the dear creature, shades, till the faintest "off color" is visible. In pearl-white we are shown a tint that almost approaches the rose-pearl in shade; another, that has a suspicion of rose in tint; another, with the faintest suspicion of lilac—this being quite perceptible on the wrong side of pale satin or satin brocade; and from these scarcely perceptible tints of color in the silk fabrics displayed, there are numerous and fainter shades, till the existence of a colored ray is distinguishable only when held beside a piece of the white silk. Cream-white of the medium shade is that in the most decided favor for the bridal robe; and of the whites is that which is regarded as the most becoming or the least trying to the complexion.—Frank Leslie's Journal.

A Good Account.

"To sum it up, six long years of bed-ridden sickness and suffering, during every year, total, $1,350—all of which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her own housework for a year since without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it for their benefit.

The Value of Time.

As is a fire, the loss greatly depends upon the time required for efficient aid to arrive, so is the result of catarrh greatly depends upon the speedy use of efficient remedies. For over a quarter of a century, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy has been the standard remedy. Its popularity since it has effected are numbered by thousands. Each year has witnessed an increased sale. Its reputation is the result of its specific merit. If the disease has extended to the throat or lungs, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery should be used with the Catarrh Remedy. These two medicines will speedily cure the most stubborn case of catarrh. See Dr. Pierce's Common-Sense Medical Adviser, a work of over 900 pages. Price, only $1.50. Address the author, R. V. THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, MAR. 4, - - - 1879.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Feb. 21, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL

Perusing the line of my last week's remarks on February gayety, I must mention the Martha Washington Reception for the benefit of St. John's Guild, which occupied the Academy of Music Thursday night, and which was mainly notable for a carefully prepared and successfully executed representation of Washington's inauguration as first President of the United States, which formed the great tableau of the occasion. As your readers are doubtless aware, the scene here represented transpired in front of old Federal Hall, which then occupied the site of the Sub-Treasury Building on Wall street. Scenery painted especially for the occasion, accurately reproduced this building and its surroundings, and every personage of historic importance who participated in the real ceremony was cleverly personated in its mimic repetition.

General Washington was personated by Mr. Tibbets, of Boston, an old gentleman of seventy. In accordance with tradition, his magnificent white locks were combed up and tide into a queue behind, to resemble a powered wig. He wore a brown coat, a ruffled shirt and silver shoe buckles, and presented a very imposing figure. He stood at the left of a table on the balcony; on the other side was Robert R. Livingston, great grandson of Chancellor Livingston, who administered the oath. Behind the table stood a descendant of Samuel A. Otis, then Secretary of the Senate, who held the crimson cushion on which rested the original Bible that Washington kissed. Crowding close about the two central figures were John Adams, Vice President, and Samuel A. Otis, Secretary of the Senate; Count de Moustier, the French Ambassador; Don Diego Gardoqui, the Spanish Ambassador; Colonel Richard Henry Lee, Oliver Ellsworth, Baron Steuben, General Hayes, Alexander Hamilton, General Knox, Edmund Randolph and Ebenezer Hazard, members of the first Cabinet; while ranged about the stage and forming a suitable frame for the impressive picture, were lines of soldiers in various uniforms which were worn by the crack troops of that day.

After the interesting spectacle, nearly the whole night was devoted to dancing and to the custom ary promenading for the display of those elegant toilets which are described at length in the next morning's papers.

With all the special attractions in the shape of the numerous annual balls and other periodical festivities which are packed into this month, the regular amusements do not seem to suffer for patronage, but seem rather to be overcrowded, and the main reason of it is "H. M. S. Pinafore." Nobody thinks of asking his neighbor now-a-days if he has been to see "Pinafore." The only question is as to how many times, or at how many different theatres one has seen and heard its burlesque beauties. New York has been absolutely and utterly captured by the capital compound of clever nonsense and delightful music, and it seems to be so firmly established that I greatly doubt whether anything but hot weather will be able to drive it from the boards. I did at one time know how many theatres were running it here and in Brooklyn, but as the fever spread I lost my count and have no longer the enterprise to look up the latest statistics. The standard performance of it is that the "Standard" theatre, and from that level down to the "His Mud Scow Pinafore" at the San Francisco Minstrels, there are a different grades of rendition of those clever gags and excruciating jokes which have so universally crept into current conversation and journalism, that we are all thoroughly leavened with them.

Every one hums and quotes Pinafore, "and so do his sister and his cousins and his aunts." The musical young man, and even the street Arab, have reverently discarded "Grandfather's Clock," and now favor us with the rhythmical recitations of Sir Joseph Porter, K. C. B., or the melodious numbers of Little Buttercup. The hand-organ makers are working for dear life to get it ready for the deadly summer campaign of those Italian bandits. Church, court room and Fifth avenue mansion are alike infected.

Who ever saw a whole metropolis wriggling on a pin afore? I never did.

"What! Never?

No. Never.

What! Never!

Well, hardly ever."

It is not long since I made some remarks on the growth of New York as compared with that of other American cities, in which the few figures quoted went to show that Gotham was in no immediate danger of being overtaken in the race for population. Large as was the rate of increase previously, the extension of elevated railroad facilities to the upper part of the island has brought it up much higher. So rapidly is the upper end of the city filling up that the Post Office cannot keep pace with the growth in the matter of furnishing mail delivery facilities, and has applied to Washington for authority to largely increase the force of letter carriers in that region.

Long Island and New Jersey too are greatly exercised over this tendency of New Yorkers to live in New York. An astonishing large proportion of the taxes in the suburban towns are paid by city business men living and owning property there, and the prospect of losing this element of wealth naturally alarms the natives. In Newark a mass-meeting has already been called to discuss plans for reducing expenses and taxes, and otherwise to give the town more attractions as a residence, in the hope of retaining the thousands of families who, it is feared, will otherwise forsake it for the now convenient neighborhood of Central Park.

A sly fox as Jay Gould and sometimes given to playing 'possum. It is not many weeks since he was reported as running a heavy and losing game in some stock or other, and it was even rumored that Master Reynard, for so many years the terror of the whole Wall street chicken coop had received a mortal hurt and could not last long. But alas for the hopes and the predictions of the small fry. On Monday last the old "critter" came out from his lair and quietly gobbled up a lot of ten. It is said that on that day his sales of Union Pacific, which bought at 30 and sold at 38, netted him between four and five millions of dollars—enough to pay his board for several weeks and leave him something to put in the savings bank. The next rumor of Mr. Gould's downfall will be regarded with considerable suspicion.

RADIX.

CLIPPINGS.

Gen. Butler's income from his Lowell investments alone amount to about $75,000 annually.

Very much obleeched, but if it's all the same to His Holiness, Dr. Newman will not be Cardinal.

Aleck Stevens, they tell us, has been succeeded by Pete Boorygard as Supreme Commander of the Sons of Malta in America.

A letter is published which was written by Rutherford B. Hayes, on Jan. 4, 1861, in which he said of the seceding Southern States: "We cannot recover them. The free States alone, if we must go on alone, will make a glorious nation. I do not feel gloomy when I look forward."

Every day I meet Democrats who express a desire to have him renominated by us. Only Saturday one who has been, and is still, very prominent in his party declared that if the Republicans nominated General Grant, he would take the field himself and stump the State for him.—N. Y. Cor. Chicago Journal.

By Jimcrax.

"I say," said one Greenbacker to another, on New Year's morning, "how does it look?"

"O, it's got to come, got to come," replied the other; you'll hear something drop pretty soon."

"But they say they've got more gold than they need, and resumption isn't such a terrible thing to accomplish, after all."

"O, ho! you weaken, eh? You go back on your party, do you? You, you turn in with the money kings, eh? Nice talk for a Greenback man. How much do you get—who pays you? Don't remember * * * and that 'obligation' very well, do you? I tell you this country has gone to thunder, already, and you know it! What did Gen. Cary say? What did Moses W. Field say? What did they all say? You know what they said. Have you forgotten that millions of men, women and children are starving every day? Ain't they? 'Money enough' eh? You a sworn Greenbacker, and dare talk like that, hoa—"

"I speak as an honest man now, not as a politician."

"O, you do? Look at the gold gamblers and—"

"But their occupation is gone now."

"O, 'tis hey? Look at the enormous rate of interest and—"

"Plenty of money now for seven and eight per cent."

"Look at the—look at the—the mortgages—"

"Five mortgages being discharged now to where one is put on record."

"Who cares a (dash) for that—look at our—our taxes!"

"As neither of us have any taxes to pay we wont grumble about that—but I understand the reduction this year is very satisfactory to property owners."

"You're a nice Greenback man, you are; working for 10 shillings a day, and—"

"Yes ten shillings a day, and saving more money every week than I could save when I was getting two dollars a day."

"Well, you'd better go over and join the Republicans if that's the way you talk."

"Well, I have about come to that conclusion myself. When I find that everything has turned out just as has all along been advertised in the Republican programme, and when I find, as I have found, that nearly every prediction of the leaders of the Greenback party has proven false, I must confess that as an honest man, having no axe to grind, I am to-day a stalwart Republican."

"You're a fool!"

"Not quite—pretty near one—about three feet from one!"

Reader—be honest now—provided there was a fool in that small crowd of two, which one was it!—[Post and Tribune.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. H. Cummins, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

AT the annual meeting of the Wisconsin State Horticultural society, recently held at Madison, resolutions were adopted demanding that nurserymen be held responsible for the acts of their agents; that the planters should require of all who solicit their orders unquestionable proof that they are authorized agents of some reliable nurseryman, and that such nurserymen are able and willing to meet the representations of their agents; and that allegations as to quantity, or extraordinary excellence, or exorbitant prices, should be taken as prima facie evidences of fraud.

SECY SHERMAN made the eighty-ninth call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds, on the 17th. Amount, $20,000,000; interest and principal payable on and after May 17 next.

A FEW days ago, Mr. Henry Tador started from New York, with the avowed intention of riding on horseback all the way from that city to Punta Arenas, the most southerly bolus of Patagonia, in South America.

ACCORDING to San Francisco dispatches of the 17th, great excitement existed in Alaska over an anticipated outbreak of the natives, who had threatened to annihilate the whites. The agent had called upon the adjacent British authorities for aid in warding off the anticipated attack. The Collector had telegraphed Secy Sherman for assistance.

A PASSENGER-TRAIN on the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad, which left Selma, Ala., on the morning of the 18th, broke through a rotten bridge across Mulberry Creek, near the latter city. The entire train except the engine was wrecked, and every person on board except the engineer and fireman were either killed or injured. Three persons were killed outright, three fatally injured and about twenty-five more or less hurt. Among the fatally injured was Stanton, the General Superintendent of the road.

AT Louisville, Ky., on the 21st, George Washington (colored) was hung. As the trap was sprung, the prisoner fell with such violence that the rope broke off short at the neck. Washington was hastily picked up, the noose readjusted, and the trap again sprung, this time the execution being successfully accomplished.

IN a Chicago restaurant, on the afternoon of the 21st, the cook went into the basement, with a lighted lamp, to draw a quantity of gasoline. As explosion followed, the poor fellow was burned to death and the restaurant destroyed.

HENRY BIGELOW WILLIAMS, a Boston real-estate dealer, failed on the 23d. Liabilities, $2,365,651.

AS a large crowd was witnessing the operation of a new steam-pump at Stockton, Cal., on the 22d, the boiler exploded and hurled the engineer and fireman a height of 3,500 pounds, with great force through the multitude, a distance of 150 feet. Sixteen persons were killed outright, and twenty-six others were more or less seriously hurt.

Personal and Political.

THE Sub-Committee of the National House Committee on Appropriations, on the 17th, recommended the appropriation of $26,000,000 to meet the requirements of the Arrearages-of-Pensions bill, and the House passed a bill to that effect.

AT Cincinnati, on the 16th, Judge Baxter, of the United States Circuit Court, decided that the United States Election law is Constitutional, and that Congress had an undoubted right to enact the law.

THE Michigan Senate, on the 16th, voted, for United States senator to succeed Mr. Christiancy (resigned), with the following result: For Chandler, (Rep.), 62; Barnes (Dem.), 2; Chamberlain (Greenback), 5. In the House the vote was: For Chandler, 66; Barnes, 20; Chamberlain, 13.

THE Rt.-Rev. Thomas Foley, D. D., Bishop Administrator of the Catholic Diocese of Chicago, died, in that city, on the morning of the 19th, from typhoid pneumonia. The deceased prelate was fifty-seven years old.

THE special committee of the United States Senate, appointed to investigate the cause of the omission of the Hot-Springs section from the enrolled Sundry Civil Appropriation bill of last session, made a report, on the 19th, to the effect that all the evidence goes to show that the omission was a clerical error, made by overworked and exhausted members and clerks of the House Committee while examining the bill in sections, as they severally came from the Conference Committee during the last hours of the session. The report says it is clearly proven that neither Senator Conover, nor any member or officer of the Senate, is in any way responsible for the loss or omission of the section from the bill, and that the bill did not come into their possession from the time it left the House Committee until it was placed before the President for his signature.

GEN. JOHN A. LOGAN, Senator-elect from Illinois, arrived in Washington on the evening of the 20th, and met with an enthusiastic reception at the hands of his Republican friends.

THE INVESTIGATION.

The Potter Committee.

The committee reassembled at Washington, on the 16th, and placed on file affidavits of Judge H. G. Hilgard and Mr. Chandler, to the effect that, during the sitting of the Florida Board of Canvassers, Mr. Chandler, Mr. Cook and Mr. Cooke, who complained that he had been locked out of the room by Republican members, were not ejected; they had seen Gov. Stearns and Gen. Noyes come from the room, and had spoken to him while Cooke was denied admission.

Mr. F. Coyle testified that he went to Florida under instructions from Pelton; Cooper gave him instructions and also a cipher key; he was to send his dispatches to Henry Havemeyer, his instructions were to engage in local politics to the Democrats there in obtaining all the evidence possible; was to send in bills for all his outlays for any expenses requisite for that purpose, and to act them in any way he could; was authorized to employ money, limited in amount by his own discretion, to secure evidence; Cooper had supplied the expenditure of pretty nearly $10,000, although enough did not go to Chandler; he destroyed his key; some of the dispatches ascribed to Mr. Barker, were written, and others not; the $20,000 proposition was made by Alexander Long; $5 a volunteer was to be paid for those who went before he left Washington; he said to him the Returning Board would be worked for $200; Cooper also testified to a telegram from New York, instructing him to go to Florida; he received $1,000 in addition to his pay; the gentleman to whom he had been introduced by Mr. Shields made a speech in favor of the bill granting pensions to the surviving soldiers of the Mexican War, in which he was majoring at post in the Florida contested-election case of Finley v. Bisbee, deciding the former contestee not entitled to the seat, was agreed to—132 to 122—and the bill was passed.

On the 20th, U. S. Marshal Wharton, on motion of counsel, was allowed to go to Baltimore to get the money. Lawrence Cornell, Chairman of the South Carolina Democratic State Central Committee, and Dalton Paul Hamilton, Charleston, Columbia & Augusta Railroad Company, has authorized the correspondents to say that he is unequivocally denied the statement of Weed in the Tilden case, that he (Cornell) had offered to corrupt the Legislature or elect Democratic members by bribery; further, that he had personal acquaintance with all the members of the board, and his previous affiliations with the Republican party; witness told Solomon it was utterly useless for him to talk of any negotiations with the Returning Board on such point; that the returns of their votes, without any dispute whatever, without entering into any of the disputed or canvassed returns, showed clearly the election of the Hayes Electors, and that the Returning Board of South Carolina would unquestionably do their duty in declaring their election. If (continued) Solomon seemed unwilling to go back to those for whom he spoke with such a decided negative at the start; he (witness) still further, and unsolicited by him, drew a distinction and in pretty strong terms between himself and Solomon were still friendly, and he (witness) had no objection to be cross-examined on any matter.

Thomas Clark, a New York, told how he happened to go to Florida. He said he saw Dr. Campbell after the Returning Board had adjourned, and said to him that he (witness) did not see why they could not get the vote of Mr. Stark for the Electors, and if he was in Cowgill's place he should feel it his duty to give the vote to the Tilden Electors; witness said he held a thoroughly independent position and should not be termed counsel to the Republican party, although he had given them, from time to time, upon points of law and did other legal work for them.

Gen. Barlow appeared before the committee, on the 19th, and concluded an elaborate defense of the conduct with which he has been charged while in Florida, during the electoral count, by stating that he went down to Tallahassee for the purpose of being on hand to hear judgment in the matter for the Democrats and Republicans, with the idea that they could, if such, and he therefore had not the suspicion of intention in failing to remain there. The people who could throw any light on the matter had come before the committee.

William F. Chandler was recalled, and said that he had never met Gen. Barlow, but spoke to the rod as counsel for the Republican members of the canvassing committee; they "chaffed" entered into that relation and remained in it from then to the end of the session. When Barlow left the room Cooke was denied admission.

Mr. Chandler was sent by Secretary Sherman to Florida under instructions from Pelton; Cooper gave him instructions and also a cipher key; he was to send his dispatches to Henry Havemeyer, his instructions were to engage in local politics to the Democrats there in obtaining all the evidence possible; was to send in bills for all his outlays for any expenses requisite for that purpose, and to act them in any way he could; was authorized to employ money, limited in amount by his own discretion, to secure evidence; Cooper had supplied the expenditure of pretty nearly $10,000, although enough did not go to Chandler; he destroyed his key; some of the dispatches ascribed to Mr. Barker, were written, and others not; the $20,000 proposition was made by Alexander Long; $5 a volunteer was to be paid for those who went before he left Washington; he said to him the Returning Board would be worked for $200; Cooper also testified to a telegram from New York, instructing him to go to Florida; he received $1,000 in addition to his pay; the gentleman to whom he had been introduced by Mr. Shields made a speech in favor of the bill granting pensions to the surviving soldiers of the Mexican War, in which he was majoring at post in the Florida contested-election case of Finley v. How MICHIGAN SIDE WENT TO WAR.—The Vermontville Handy says: "M. W. Cramer, when he felt the call of arms in 1861, chopping down trees for a wilderness, left his ax in the side of the tree, went out, served through the war in the Eighth Michigan, came home, went to the woods, found the ax and finished cutting down the tree, returned to the home and said to his wife: There, now, that tree is down."

THE TEXAS MAMMOTH.—Leroy township, Oceola county, boasts of a standing elm tree 28 feet in circumference. There is another below, lying on the ground, on section 27 that is large enough to drive a yoke of steers into a hollow. In Lincoln township, on section 6, is an elm stump that is 32 feet 6 inches in circumference, and in Ellsworth township, Lake county, stands an elm that is 29 feet in circumference.

The Winnepeg Free Press, in noticing the arrival of the first mail by railroad, draws a contrast between the postal facilities of that locality twenty-five years ago and now. At that period it nearly swelt was all that the Post Carry of those days could boast. Once a year the Hudson Bay company's boats brought a small load of postal matter, which had been made up in London, shipped to York Factory and thence to Fort Garry.

For more than fifty years there have been many monument collectors in Washington from various southern States. They have sold large quantities of rock to confederate, and with Stephen Wright on roof tooling Republicans in reference to the migratory season and the immediate future of their race. The consultations have taken shape in the calling of a conference to meet in Nashville, May 6, when the whole subject will be discussed and perhaps until action taken.

A petition is being circulated in Hudson Township, in this county, asking the Legislature to annex that Township to Otsego county. The avowed intention is, to aid Hilton to fill, to annex certain other territory to Emmet county, and kick the balance into Antrim, thus disorganizing Charlevoix county. They believe all this can be done, no doubt. The only price is off the same piece of stupidness that characterize the same party law-makers on the bridge question. If there is any way of compromising this matter by ceding the quarter section that Niles lives on to any adjoining county, count us in. That immense basin needs greater territory in which to display its powers.

A new daily greenback paper has been started at Grand Rapids, called the Leader. In resemblies the National Inquirer (suspended immediately after the last election) in size type, and "make-up." Its editorials are able, and hostile to any fusion or other scheme to make the new party a wet-nurse for the old Bourbon democracy. Its political editor is S. B. McCracken, author of "Michigan at the Centennial." There has been and is notability since the last campaign among the 50 greenback papers which used to brag so loudly. More than half of them have dried up and blown away in our winter winds, or become as unmoored as the "that" money they advocated. The rest vegetate and membranous of those sheets, published at Detroit, has shrunk in size, reduced its price, forsaken green backism and is offered for sale at a very low figure while its editor moseys around for a job as "public prosecutor."—Lansing Republican.

Michigan's Agricultur l Advantages as Compared with Her Sister States. —The Pine Lake Region.

President Hygart, of the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad Company, has issued a circular showing the advantages to farmers of agriculture in our State as compared with other States in the Union, and the comparison is very flattering. It is compiled from the National Agricultural Report of 1875, and hence is authentic and reliable. It shows, first, the prices of the staples of corn, wheat, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, potatoes and hay in our State, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Oleomon, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, and the average in the United States.

In corn the average price in Michigan was 39 cents per bushel, and in the United States but 35 4-5th cents, and but one State quoted Michigan in price; the other States were all lower, Nebraska showing but 18 cents.

In wheat the average price in Michigan was $1 02 per bushel, and in the United States $1 08, only one of the above States coming near to her.

In rye the average price in Michigan was 84 cents, and in the United States 59 1-5th. Michigan stands fourth in quantity produced, and second as to price.

In oats she leads all the ten States mentioned in price, her average being 30 cents per bushel and that of the United States 22 1-5.

In barley she was fourth as to quality, while the average price in the State was 69 cents per bushel, and in the United States 63 9 10.

She average price of buckwest in Michigan was 58 cents per bushel, and in the United States 69 7 10. Michigan standing fourth as to quality.

In potatoes, the price in Michigan was 36 cents per bushel, and in the United States the average price was 41 8 10.

She stands first on the list as to price of hay, the average price per ton in the State being $8 60, and $8 04 in Ohio, the second best. In the United States the average price was $8 39 2-10.

The average cash value per acre of the principal crops for 1877 in Michigan was $15 62, the price in the State coming nearest this being $13 34, and in the tenth and lowest but $7 89.

The live stock on Michigan farms, (January 1878,) was worth a total of $43,619,932, comprising horses, mules, cows, oxen sheep, and hogs, there being in the State 1,720,000 sheep and about half the number of beef cattle.

The value of a crop on a farm of 160 acres at the above prices and divided into equal portions for each of the eight named staples, being 20 acres of corn, 20 acres of wheat, etc., would be in Michigan $256160, and taking two of the other stares, at random, in Kansas, the crop would be $2,088 40, and in Nebraska but $1,581 20, but little more than half the value of a crop in Michigan.

These facts show conclusively that Michigan is the best State in the West, or in the Union, for that matter, for agriculturists. No need of emigration for Michigan men.

Another fact as true as the above is that Grand Traverse and the Pine Lake region lead the State in the quality and yield of their products. Our wheat is quoted highest in the Chicago market. Our potatoes have become traditionary as to superiority, and our fruit took the premium at the Centennial, and carries off the prize at every Michigan State fair. Added to this, the superiority of our climate, and we have the finest region in the Northern States.

Fink's Magic oil at See's.

A large and valuable team of mules belonging to Messrs. Hannah, Lay & Co., broke through the ice on the Bay Wednesday and were drowned. They were employed in hauling ice and when the sled was about two thirds load of the ice on which the team stood suddenly gave way letting team, sled and load into the water where it was about thirty feet deep. They were under water only a short time but when taken out were dead. An unnoticed crack in the ice was the cause of the accident.

Angell's Sentence.

CHARLES W. ANGELL, indicted for the larceny and embezzlement of some $120,000 in bonds and cash from the Pullman Palace-Car Company, appeared before the Criminal Court in Chicago, on the 27th ult., and entered a plea of guilty. Before sentence was passed, Mr. A. S. Weinsheimer, Angell's successor to the Secretaryship of the company, was sworn, and testified to the prisoner's taking the bonds and money. The bonds, he said, were in New York, and the cash in the company's safe in Chicago, the combination to which Angell, the prisoner, had in his possession. Of the bonds, $80,000 had been recovered, and of the cash, $4,000. The Court then asked Mr. Angell if he desired to make any statement. He replied, "Not any." Judge Williams then turned to the prisoner, who stood with folded arms, and addressed him as follows:

"In this case, sir, you have not only taken property which was not your own, and thereby committed a criminal act, but you have committed a breach of trust of such a character as to shake the confidence of the whole community in every bank in public who are intrusted with large amounts of money. It is just such acts as this that astonish and shock a community and corrupt it. We expect that men who have been entirely educated and reared under any moral influence, who have had nothing to keep them from the right, will have been more subject to the most disastrous and wicked consequences than those who have had to struggle with these temptations from their earliest years, or the condition in which they were at the time the theft was committed. But the act of yours is an act that cannot be palliated, so far as I know, in any way. You had unlimited confidence bestowed upon you, and in violation of that confidence, and in abuse of it, you converted the money of your employers—not in any little way, through a pressing necessity which might have been brought to bear upon you, but you did it in a deliberate way, and when there was no necessity at all for any such action on your part. I could not sit here as a Judge, and hold up any lesser and punish the small offenders who come before me from day to day, and not punish the larger offenders. You have been a man of standing in this community. You are very intelligent. The surroundings which you have had in time past should have kept you from a crime of this sort. It has been noised abroad through the whole country, and I must punish you, not adequately, because the law does not permit me to do it, but I must punish you to the extent of the law. I only regret in this case that the law does not permit me to punish you more severely—not because I have the least unkindness toward you, but because I consider the crime of such an aggravated character that, if I could inflict a more severe punishment, I should feel that justice to the community demanded it.

"The sentence of the Court will be that you be confined in the Penitentiary for the term of ten years. That is the full extent of the time for which I can sentence you."

Angell listened to the severe language of the Judge as if he thought he was only a part of a machine and the Judge another; each one in the discharge of his particular duty, and as the Court ceased speaking he turned himself toward the passage leading to the Penitentiary with a barely perceptible smile on his unshaved lip. In a moment he passed out of sight.

The Plague in Moscow in 1770-71.

The appearance of the plague in the Astrakhan Government has revived the memory of the terrible outbreak in Moscow during part of the years 1770 and 1771. The first victims were the soldiers whom shot and steel had spared during the war waged against Turkey. It then made its way into Russia from the southwest, extending as far north as Serpukhof. It first began to declare itself in August, 1770, but it was for some time ignored or denied, the Empress Catherine II. writing to say that if any one said there was a plague in Moscow he lied; nothing but fever was to be feared. But after being kept under by the winter's frost and officially prevented against during the summer, the pest burst forth in the autumn with a fury which reason alone could not control. By the middle of September, 1771, the condition of Moscow was terrible. From 800 to 1,000 deaths took place every day. The upper classes fled from the plague-stricken town, and the populace took to rioting. On the 16th (27th) of September arose out of what is generally known as the "tchumny bunt," or plague riot. The populace assembled in crowds before one of the gates of the kremlin, wishing to avail themselves of the good offices of the Bogolyubof miraculous Madonna. The Archbishop Ambrose Zertis Kaunensky prudently ordered the picture to be removed from its usual locality to a more open spot, in order to avoid the danger likely to arise from the thronging together of so many plague-fearing worshipers. As they were raised that he was stealing the holy portrait, and that he must be put to death. He fled in disguise from the kremlin, and took refuge in the Donskoi monastery. Thither, however, he was pursued, and there he was torn from behind the altar. "For two hours," according to the evidence of an eye-witness, he was beaten with a cudgel. Then he was left for dead. But after a time his right hand was seen to move, whereupon the riders again attacked him, beating him on the head till he died. Only by grape-shot was the riot suppressed. A few days later arrived in Moscow Count Gregory Orlof, sent expressly by the Empress to put down the plague. The city, so long deprived of guidance, received him with rapture. And, in truth, he deserved to be hailed with acclamation: for he attacked the plague with such vigor that he overcame it. Drawing a number of sanitary cordons round Moscow, he maintained so strict a quarantine that even the dogs which ran across his lines and the crows which flew over them were shot. All popular gatherings were prohibited; no burials were allowed within the city; and the faithful were even prevented from entering the churches, being obliged to listen to divine service from without. Before Count Orlof's arrival the common people had showed a decided aversion toward the hospitals, in which they were roughly treated and badly fed by coarse and ignorant medical practitioners. Orlof inspected the buildings set apart for the sufferers, visited them frequently, and soon brought about a change greatly for the better in the treatment of the patients. The number of daily deaths soon fell to 300, and then became smaller and smaller until the plague was stayed. Count Orlof was enabled on Nov. 28 (O. S.) to leave Moscow rejoicing over a clean bill of health. On his return to St. Petersburg the Count was received with many manifestations of joy and triumph. A medal was struck in his honor, bearing on one side his portrait, and on the other a representation of Curtius leaping into the gulf with an inscription that "Russia, too, possesses such sons." Hercules slaying Lady Superstition would have formed, perhaps, a more appropriate image.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Placer Mining.

The first gold that a country furnishes is generally derived from placer washings. This is the simplest and most inexpensive method of obtaining the precious metal, and therefore best adapted to the use of the pioneer or discoverer whose capital and capacity for labor is limited. Along the banks of streams small water-worn pieces of gold are found; investigation frequently reveals the metal in greater quantities; then placer mining in its simplest form begins. Gold alone, of the precious metals, is found in placers; where native silver occurs, it is always in connection with the original argentiferous rocks, never separated from them. Nature, however, has furnished us gold both in vein and placer mines.

In placer mines, or more properly "diggings," the gold occurs separated from the rock in which it was primarily contained. The auriferous rocks were decomposed by various natural forces, and the gold, sand and gravel removed by water. The distance to which the particles were carried depended upon the size and rapidity of the current and the weight of the particles.

The larger and heavier stones, gravel and sand, were deposited first, afterward the finer material. We find the gold in consequence of its specific gravity in the bottom of the stream mixed with gravel and sand. The nearer we approach the bed-rock the more abundant is the metal.

Placers are of two kinds—shallow and deep diggings. The deposits which are near the surface, and have been left by recent streams, are called shallow diggings. They usually occur in the beds of ravines and on the bars or flats in a river. In the deep diggings, the gold sometimes lies at great depths, the stream having been filled up with earth, rocks and debris. At Tuolumne, Cal., the bed of the stream in which the precious metal is found is 150 feet below the present surface and is covered with basalt and volcanic ashes. Great labor is here necessary to produce the gold.

Shallow placers are most primitive in their nature, and require for their working only cheaply-obtained and inexpensive implements. Natural forces have thrown up the rock which contained the gold; therefore, unlike vein mining, only a simple washing is needful, in order to obtain the pure metal; while in vein-mining and deep placers complicated processes are necessary. The washing is accomplished in pans, rockers or sluices. The pan is usually made of cast iron, as it resists the action of mercury. The sides are sloping and its diameter is about fourteen inches. The rich earth is placed in the pan, which is dipped in water and shaken; the lighter particles float over the edge, and the stones and gravel settle on top; these are also swept off with the hand and thrown away. This operation is continued until the earth is washed out and the metal remains; or a little mercury is added to amalgamate the gold in order to prevent the loss of any fine particles. On a larger scale this washing is accomplished by means of a rocker, which is like an old-fashioned cradle, to one end of which a screen is attached to receive the rich earth. Water flows over the screen, while a rocking motion is continued.

Sluices are long, narrow troughs across the bottom of which bars are nailed, called "riffle bars." The "pay" dirt is shoveled in and water allowed to flow over the mass. The lighter particles are carried away by the current; while the gold, on account of its weight, sinks to the bottom and is amalgamated, either on copper plates or with mercury placed behind the riffle bars. Four-fifths of the gold from the California placers have been extracted by sluices, and this is the method employed where large quantities of earth are to be treated. Deep placers are generally worked by hydraulic mining.—Mining Stock Journal.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—Near the site of Jacob's Well, in the City of Samaria, Palestine, there is a Baptist Church with a congregation numbering 100.

—In Calcutta there are 199 Hindoo temples, 117 Mohammedan mosques, thirty-one Christian churches and two Jewish synagogues.

—There were 133 South Carolinian attending colleges outside the State last year. The number attending colleges within the State was 334.

—The per capita cost of instruction in Milwaukee schools, based upon the average daily attendance, is $66.38. Based upon the whole number enrolled, it is $47.40.

—Bridges Sun, who was collecting from the Catholics of Vermont funds in aid of a supposititious convent at Montreal, decamped from Vergennes when Inspector Wise was detected and exposed by a priest.

—The Catholic Bishop of Montreal has issued a circular forbidding ladies to belong to church choirs after the 1st of June next. Many of the churches have anticipated the order by dismissing lady singers.

—The average daily attendance in the San Francisco schools for the calendar year ending Dec. 31 was 26,427.8 This is regarded as an increase. The schools were $857,855.09; the expenditures were $961,425.75.

—At the result of seven years' work in Texas, Northern Methodism now counts 14,207 members, 2,267 probationers, 308 local and 221 traveling preachers, 174 churches and 177 Sunday-Schools, with 13,822 scholars.

—A new sect, the believers in the age to come, has been started at Boston, composed of enthusiasts, who hope some time to join in rescuing Palestine from Moslem rule. Jonathan Cummings, formerly a Methodist minister, one of the leaders and editor of the Age to Come Herald, hopes to remove to Jerusalem to preach for publication as soon as he can raise the funds.

—Archbishop Henni, of Milwaukee, who recently celebrated his golden jubilee, has addressed a circular letter to all priests in his Diocese, conveying an imperative order to desist from writing communications to the secular press, discussing the question of the appointment of a Coadjutor Bishop. All letters or communications bearing upon the subject, instead of being sent to the political press for publication, should, he says, either be addressed to him or forwarded to Rome.

—A clergyman sent postal-cards to all the Congregational Churches of Kansas, to find out the population of the towns and villages, and the nearness or gravity in the bottom of the stream mixed with gravel and sand. The nearer we approach the bed-rock the more abundant is the metal.
